better to be made in this kind a victor over his own passions than to be universal emperor over all the world. Saith Seneca, there are many men that have subdued principalities, kingdoms, cities, towns and countries, and brought them under their own mastery; but there are few that have guided themselves, but still there is a tiger within them that disgraceth and obscureth their outward conquest by reason of foul seethings and corruptions in their own flesh; therefore, for a man to get the victory, and to overcome himself, is to get the victory, and to overcome all the world; for man is a microcosm, a little world, as St. Austin saith.— Day.— Hall Caine's legend.— Our strongest temptations are those that are re-enforced from within, which take hold of our very natures. Our hardest work is to conquer our own selves. "There is a northern legend of a man who thought he was pursued by a troll. His ricks were fired, his barns unroofed, his cattle destroyed, his lands blasted, and his firstborn slain. So he lay in wait for the monster where it lived in the chasms near his house, and in the darkness of night he saw it. With a cry he rushed upon it and gripped it about the waist, and it turned upon him and held him by the shoulder. Long he wrestled with it, reeling, staggering, falling, and rising again; but at length a flood of strength came to him and he overthrew it and stood over it, covering it, conquering it, with its back across his thigh and his right hand set hard at its throat. Then he drew his knife to kill it, and the moon shot through a rack of cloud, opening an alley of light about it, and he saw its face, and lo! the face of the troll was his own!"

"The teacher offers to save the young and inexperienced from the slower and more painful process of learning by experience."—Plumptre.

"We die, morally speaking, of a complication of diseases—pride and self-love seldom being absent from the inquest."

CHAPTER THE SIXTH.

1, 2. (1) surety,[a] if thou hast given thy name as security. Jewish law was very severe on sureties. friend, R. V., "neighbour." stricken thy hand, the form or sign by which a pledge was taken,[b] just as we shake hands to-day to seal a bargain. stranger, prob. the alien money-lender, either Phœnician or Egyptian, who will be sure to demand the literal execution of his bond. (2) snared, etc., prob. in some fixed form of words, and not by writing, the contract was made.

Suretyship.— I. It is wrong for a man to come under engagements that are beyond his actually existing means. Such a course is one not merely of imprudence, but there is in it a threefold injustice. First, to the creditor for whom he becomes surety. Secondly, to his family, if he has one, to whom the requisition of payment must bring distress and ruin. Thirdly, to those who give him credit in his own transactions, with the risks of his own trade. II. The same observations are applicable to the making of engagements with inconsideration and rashness. The case here supposed is evidently that of suretyship for a friend to a stranger. And the rashness may be viewed either in relation to the person or to the case.— Wardlaw.

The custom of striking hands at the conclusion of a bargain has maintained its ground among the customs of civilized nations down to the present time. To strike hands with another was the emblem of agreement among the Greeks under the walls of Troy, for Nestor complains, in a public assembly of the chiefs, that the Trojans had violated the engagements which they had sanctioned by libations of wine and by giving their right hands. Another striking instance is quoted by Calmet from Ockley's History of the Saracens. Telha, just before he died, asked one of Ali's men if he belonged to the Emperor of the Faithful, and being informed that he did, "Give me, then," said he, "your hand, that I may put mine into it, and by this action renew the oath of fidelity I have already made to Him."— Paxton's Ills. of Scripture.

a "The word used in A. V. primarily means to interweave. A man interwoven with a stranger is one implicated in the same account."

Ge. xliii. 9.

b Job. xvii. 3; Eze. xvii. 18.

"Aristotle defineth friendship to be a love of another, not for any good we get, but merely for the party's sake who is beloved."—Anthony Burgess.

"You have no right to pledge what you do not possess. Give; give liberally if you can; give heartily and promptly, but never come under enslaving conditions."—Parker.

3—5. (3) now, i. e. at once, and earnestly. when, R. V., "seeing" thou hast given him a right to exact payment. humble thyself, bow thyself down, offer thyself to be trodden upon, supplicate the friend to whom the pledge is given. make sure, or press hotly upon.[c] The idea is that by persuasion and importunity the bond should be got back.[d] (4) Give, etc., make it a matter of absorbing interest. (5) roe, ch. v. 19. The gazelle. He is to exercise unwearied diligence.

My son, deliver thyself.— This he is to do— 1. By means purely moral. There are other means which a man might try. He might use threatening; he might employ falsehood; but these would be sinful. The only lawful means are those here implied, viz., words of persuasion and entreaty. 2.

c Be importunate.

d "The wise man here advises the man who has made himself surety for a friend, to urge that friend importunately to pay his debt to the creditor, and so to deliver him who was surety for him."—Bede.

Without delay. He must endeavor to rectify his error at once; every day that passes over his head may be bringing nearer the day when he may be called upon to redeem his promise, and so he is to give "no sleep to his eyes nor slumber to his eyelids."— Preacher's Com.

6–8. (6) ant, a creature whose restless, unwearied activity is very remarkable. A proverbial emblem of industry.[a] (7) no guide, etc., there were all the signs and results of organization, yet no leadership; all depended on the diligence, skill, and activity of each individual.[b] (8) Provideth, etc., this has been questioned, but it has been the fixed opinion of all ages. The argument is: if the ant is so provident, how much more should man be.

A secular sermon on foresight (vss. 6–11).— Creation full of teachers. Here we gather round an insect. Lesson taught by the ant is foresight. Foresight a faculty almost Divine. A wise foresight makes life pleasant — I. By economizing time. II. By systematizing duties. III. By diminishing difficulties. Apply — Every life has a summer, so also a winter: prepare.— Parker.

Foresight in secular things. — "Here is a person who prides himself on his foresight. He bears a high repute for range and intensity of vision in all secular concerns. Yet by the very sweep and clearness of his foresight I brand him as a fool! He never missed a train, yet he was never in time for public worship; he never failed to keep an appointment with man, yet he never made an appointment with God; he was never too late for the post, yet he is in danger of being too late for heaven; he never failed to see gold in any bargain, yet he has turned away the fine gold of the gospel! He has foreseen everything but the chief thing: he has seen the shadow, not the substance; he has made a covenant with the servant and let the king pass by! Here is folly in the very midst of wisdom; and if the very wisdom be folly how great is that folly — if the light be darkness, how terrible is the gloom!" — Parker. — Ants storing up food. — "The country between Linyanti and Sesheke is perfectly flat, except patches elevated only a few feet above the surrounding level. There are also many mounds where the gigantic anthills of the country have been situated, or still appear; these mounds are evidently the work of the termites. No one who has not seen their gigantic structures can fancy the industry of these little laborers; they seem to impart fertility to the soil which has once passed through their mouths, for the Makololo find the sides of anthills the choice spots for rearing early maize, tobacco, or anything on which they wish to bestow especial care." On the banks of the Chobe he tells us he found some of the anthills thirty feet in height, and of a base so broad that trees grow on them. "The white ant keeps generally out of sight, and works under galleries constructed by night to screen them from the observation of birds. At some given signal, however, I never could ascertain what, they rush out by hundreds, and the sound of their mandibles cutting grass into lengths may be heard like a gentle wind murmuring through the leaves of the trees. They drag these pieces to the doors of their abodes, and after some hours' toil leave off work, and many of the bits of grass may be seen collected around the orifice. They continue out of sight for perhaps a month, but they are never idle. . . . At some of their operations they beat time in a curious manner. Hundreds of them are engaged in building a large tube, and they wish to beat it smooth. At a signal they all give three or four energetic beats on the plaster in unison. It produces a sound like the dropping of rain off a bush when touched. These insects are the chief agents employed in forming a fertile soil. But for their labors the tropical forests, bad as they are now with fallen trees, would be a thousand times worse. Ants surely are wiser than some men, for they learn by experience. They have established themselves, even on these plains, where water stands so long annually as to allow the lotus and other aqueous plants to come to maturity. When all the ant-horizon is submerged a foot deep, they manage to exist by ascending to little houses, built of black tenacious loam on stalks of grass, and placed higher than the line of inundation. — Livingstone.

9. How long, etc., it is the same as if it were said, "What infatuation is this which makes you lie and sleep as if you had nothing else to do?" The double question stigmatizes the sluggard's utter indolence, and suggests the a Improvident sluggards usually want sureties. Hence such are advised to industry by the ant's example.

"He that has no friend and no enemy, is one of the vulgar, and without talents, power or energy." — Lavater.

b "When I began to employ workmen in this country (Syria) nothing annoyed me more than the necessity to hire also an overseer or to fulfil this office myself. But I soon found that this was universal, and strictly necessary. The workmen, every way unlike the ant, will not work at all unless kept to it, and directed in it by an overseer, who is himself a perfect specimen of laziness."— Thomson, Land and Book.

"The Arabians hold the wisdom of the ant in such veneration that they place one of these insects in the hand of a newly-born infant, repeating these words, 'May the boy turn out clever and skilful.'"

"In some parts of South America they march periodically in armies, such myriads together, that the sound of their coming over the fallen leaves may be heard at some distance. The inhabitants, knowing the season, are on the watch, and quit their houses, which these tremendous but welcome visitors clear of centipedes forty-legs, scorpions, snakes, every living thing; and having done their work, proceed upon their way."— Southey.

"Epaminondas, finding one of his sentinels asleep, thrust him through with his sword and, being chidden for so great severity, replied, 'I left him but as I found him.' It must be our care that death serve us not in like sort, that we be not taken napping."—Trapp.

"Idleness is the bane of body and of mind; the nurse of naughtiness; the stepmother of discipline; one of the seven deadly sins; the cushion upon which the devil chiefly reposes; a great cause not only of melancholy, but of many other diseases; for the mind is naturally active; and if it be not occupied about some honest business, it rushes into mischief, or sinks into melancholy."—Burton.

picture of his prolonging his stay in bed long after every one else is abroad and about his business. Comp. ch. xxiv. 30-34.

Idleness not enjoyment. — Count Caylus, the celebrated French antiquary, spent much time in engraving the plates which illustrate his valuable works. When his friends asked him why he worked so hard at such an almost mechanical occupation, he replied, "Je grave pour ne pas me pendre," — "I engrave lest I should hang myself." When Napoleon was slowly withering away, from disease and ennui together, on the rock of St. Helena, it was told him that one of his old friends, an ex-colonel in his Italian army, was dead. "What disease killed him?" asked Napoleon. "That of having nothing to do," it was answered. "Enough," sighed Napoleon, "even had he been an emperor." Nature has beneficially provided that if the greater proportion of her sons must earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, that bread is far sweeter from the previous effort than if it fell spontaneously into the hand of listless indolence. — Potter. — Success dependent on diligence. — Few conceive, or are taught to conceive, that by a law of God as fundamental as the law of gravitation, and as universal as human society, success in life is the equivalent of industry, knowledge, prudence, and perseverance, and not the result of chance. The exceptions are few and rare and occasional, in which it would be found to come from anything in the nature of real luck. It is the effect of definite causes; and happiness would make great strides if there could be a conviction settled in the hearts of the young throughout the land that to make one's fortune means to give a fair equivalent of thought or skill or labor for that fortune. Ten thousand young hearts are to-day looking at New York as the goal of their ambition, without asking whether they have health to bear its strains; without pausing to consider whether they have virtue to withstand its temptations. They see only the great and glowing picture of their fancy, and by night and by day they think that all would be well if they could but rid themselves of their country clogs, and enter the Elysian fields of city life. This vision attracts multitudes, as by-and-by it will mock them. — Beecher.

10, 11. (10) a little sleep, graphic description of the feeling and wishes of the sluggard.[a] folding . . sleep, the well-known attitude of one who is settling himself down to sleep.[b] (11) travelleth, R. V., marg. "rover," i. e. poverty is to overtake him, as a swift traveler reaches his goal. armed man, lit. a man of a shield. "The habit of indolence is more fatally destructive than these marauders."

Idleness. — "Two things are denoted in this imagery. 1. That idleness will quickly bring poverty. 2. That it will come as a destroyer." — Stuart.

Idleness. — Among the Egyptians idleness was a capital crime. Among the Locrians, he that lent money to an idle person was to lose it. Among the Corinthians, idle persons were delivered to the carnifex. By the laws of Solon, idle persons were to suffer death. The ancients call idleness the burial of a living man: and Seneca had rather be sick than idle. Now, shall nature do more than grace? Shall poor blind heathens be so severe against idle persons, and shall Christians embrace them? Should they not rather turn their backs upon them and have no intercourse with them who think themselves too great, or to good, to hold the plough? — Brooks.

12—15. (12) naughty person, lit. man of Belial. R. V., "worthless person." wicked man, man of vanity, deficient in moral consciousness. De. xiii. 13. walketh, etc., "he walks" (lit.) in crookedness of mouth: the speech of such a one is tortuous and crafty.[c] (13) winketh,[d] using mute signs to convey his meanings, and so deceiving those who do not know the signs. speaketh . . feet, making significant gestures. "All the means by wh. man holds intercourse with man are turned to instruments of fraud and falsehood."[e] (14) Frowardness, the heart is the workshop where he prepares his villainy, Pr. ii. 14. deviseth mischief, cunning being the talent of the weak and lazy. soweth, i. e. bet. neighbors and friends; he shattereth the framework of society. (15) calamity, lit. crushing weight. suddenly, i. e. unexpectedly. broken, shivered to pieces. without remedy,[f] his destruction is beyond recovery, see ch. v. 22.

A bad man (vs. 12.) — We have here — I. The portrait of a bad man. He is 1. Perverse in speech; 2. Artful in conduct; 3. Mischievous in purpose. II. The doom of a bad man. It is — 1. Certain; 2. Sudden; 3. Irremediable. — Thomas.

a "An ironical imitation of the language of the lazy man." — Otto Zöckler.

b "The Heb., richer than the English, employs 3 synonyms for sleep. A little sleep, slumber, folding of the hands, as for a siesta."—Spk. Com.

"God will not support thee without work, but by work that is His holy ordinance: Do thy part, and God will do His."—Egard.

c "Idleness and vice are allied. Though indolent in acts, he actively and habitually is ill-natured in speech."—Fausset d Pr. x. 10; Ps. xxxv. 19.

e "He suggests wickedness to others by ungodly signals, winks, innuendoes and gesticulations." — Wordsworth.

f Da. xi. 45.

Speaking with the feet and fingers. — It should be remembered that when people are in their houses they do not wear sandals, consequently their feet and toes are exposed. When guests wish to speak with each other so as not to be observed by the host, they convey their meaning by the feet and toes. Does a person wish to leave a room in company with another, he lifts up one of his feet, and then suddenly puts it down on the ground. — He teacheth with his fingers. — When merchants wish to make a bargain in the presence of others without making known their terms, they sit on the ground, have a piece of cloth thrown over the lap, and then put each a hand under, and thus speak with the fingers. When the Brahmins convey religious mysteries to their disciples, they teach with their fingers, having the hands concealed in the folds of their robes. — Roberts.

16, 17. (16) These . . hate, a common Heb. form of climax.[a] yea, seven, this number usually represents completeness, either for good or evil. abomination, De. vii. 25. These evil things are all found in the "man of Belial" (vs. 12), specially regarded as a man who sows discord. (17) proud look, lit. eyes of loftiness.[b] The spirit that leads men to overvalue themselves, and undervalue all about them. "Pride is put first bec. it is at the bottom of all disobedience and rebellion against God's laws." — Pul. Com. lying tongue, a sure sign of the corrupt heart. hands . . blood, heartlessly cruel. Is. lix. 7.

Seven abominable things (vss. 16–19). — Here is a catalogue of evils specially odious to God. I. Haughty bearing implies — 1. Self-ignorance; 2. Unkindness; 3. Irreverence. II. Verbal falsehood. 1. Which implies a wrong heart; 2. Has a bad social tendency. III. Heartless cruelty implies — 1. Lack of sympathy with God's creatures; 2. With God's mind. IV. Vicious scheming. V. Mischievous eagerness. VI. Social slander. VII. Disturbing strife. Subject shows — 1. The moral hideousness of the world; 2. The immaculate purity of God; 3. The true mission of the godly. — Thomas.

Two views of sin. — As it is with two children, the one forbears to touch a coal, because it will black and smut his hand, the other will not by any means be brought to handle it, because he perceives it to be a fire-coal, and it will burn his fingers; thus all ungodly men, they will not touch sin because it will burn; they may be, and often are, troubled for sin, but their disquietness for sin ariseth more from the evil of punishment, the effect of sin, than from the evil that is in the nature of sin, they are troubled for sin, but it is because sin doth destroy the soul, and not because sin doth defile the soul; because God pursueth sin, and not because He hates sin; more, because it is against God's justice that is provoked, than because it is against the holiness of God which is dishonored; because God threatens sin, not because God doth forbid sin; because of the hell for sin, not because of the hell in sin. But now, on the other side, all good and godly men they hate and loathe sin, because it is of a smutting and defiling nature, because it is against the nature of God, because God loathes and hates it, more because it is against God's command than because God doth punish it; not because of the damning power of sin, but because of the defiling power of sin. — Inchinus.

18, 19. (18) deviseth, etc.,[c] "there arè evil thoughts in all men's hearts: but the devising, fabricating of them, and thus making the heart into a devil's workshop, is the mark of utter depravity and wickedness, and is abhorrent to God." — Pul. Com. feet . . mischief, Ro. iii. 15. Not only doing mischief, but doing it eagerly. (19) false . . lies, "much hurt," says Muffet, "doth the deceitful and lying witness, for he corrupteth the judge, oppresseth the innocent, suppresseth the truth, and in the courts of justice sinneth against his own soul and the Lord Himself most grievously." soweth discord, by tale-bearing, ill-natured stories, the look or shrug of the shoulders, etc. Making mischief between friends and neighbors.[d]

The brand of God. — God placed a brand on the first murderer's brow, and he carried the curse with him to his grave. He does not mark us thus now with such signs of guilt; nevertheless, he has made it clear as the day that there are some men who are the objects of his very high displeasures. We know from the text that among these are — I. Men of a proud heart. II. Men of a false spirit. III. Men that are responsible for others' death. IV. Men that devise mischief. V. Cruel executioners of wrath. VI. False witnesses. VII. Men that disturb harmony. — Clarkson.

God's blessings and curses. — There is one parallel well worthy of notice

"Rather do what is nothing to the purpose, than be idle; that the devil may find thee doing. The bird that sits is easily shot, when fliers 'scape the fowler. Idleness is the dead sea that swallows all the virtues, and the self-made sepulchre of a living man."— Quarles.

[a] Comp. Job v 19; Pr. xxx. 15, 18, 24; Am. i. ii.

[b] Ps. cxxxi. 1; Pr. xxx 13.

One author calls idleness "The most corrupting fly that can blow on the human mind."

Arnot notices the parallel between the 7 cursed things here and the 7 blessed things in the v. chap. Matt.

"As thou desirest the love of God and man beware of pride. It is a tumor in the mind that breaks and poisons all thy actions; it is a worm in thy treasure, wh. eats and ruins thy estate; it loves no man — is believed of no man; it disparages virtue in another by detraction; the friend of the flatterer, the mother of envy, and the devil of mankind, it hates superiors; it scorns inferiors; it owns no equals; — in short, till thou hate it, God hates thee." — Quarles.

[c] "The Div. eye penetrates the heart He sees all that passes there, not only the deep plots of evil, the elaborate schemes of thought, and the deliberate purposes, but ideas and emotions in the most incipient and fugitive forms. He judges the man as He sees Him there."— Dav. Thomas.

[d] A crime, which would be much more common and much more fatal in a primitive state of society. — Exp. Bib.

between the seven cursed things here and the seven blessed things in the fifth chapter of Matthew. In the Old Testament the things are set down in the sterner form of what the Lord hates, like the "Thou shalt not" of the Decalogue. In the New Testament the form is in accordance with the gentleness of Christ. There we learn the good things that are blessed, and are left to gather thence the opposite evils that are cursed. But making allowance for the difference in form, the first and the last of the seven are identical in the two lists. — Arnot.

"The slanderer does harm to three persons at once; to him of whom he says the ill, to him to whom he says it, and most of all to himself, in saying it."

20, 21. (20) father's, etc., the usual formula at the beginning of a new section, ch. i. 8, this the twelfth admonitory discourse. (21) Bind them, like a charm, or amulet.[a] tie . . neck,[b] as ornaments were worn. A figure for the beauty of moral character.

Mother's law (vs. 20). — The injunction is in form addressed to a grown son, that he forsake not in manhood his mother's law. In the pliant time of childhood the character is molded chiefly by the mother. The mother should be much with her children. In the case of mothers who live in affluence, perhaps trifling is the most pressing danger. But the command of this passage is directly addressed to the child. — Arnot.

Influence of a Christian mother.— There was once an obscure and pious woman living in a city in the south of England. History is silent respecting her ancestry, her place of birth, or her education. She had an only son, whom, in his infancy, she made it her great business to instruct, and train up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. At seven years of age his mother died, and a few years after he went to sea, and became at length a common sailor in the African slave trade. He soon became a great adept in vice — a swearer most horribly profane; and though younger than many of his companions in years, he was the oldest in guilt. But he could not shake off the remembrance of his pious mother's instructions. Though dead and in her grave, she seemed speaking to him still. After many alarms of conscience, and many pungent convictions, he became a Christian, and subsequently one of the most successful ministers of the Gospel our country ever produced. Of course, through the labor of the converted son, we may now trace the influence of the pious mother. In addition to his great ministerial labors, he wrote many evangelical works, and few authors have done more to extend the power of religion. He was highly eloquent and greatly useful in religious conversation; and his hymns, whose use in divine worship is almost commensurate with the extension of the English language, are of the most elevated and evangelical character. Follow that mother's influence further. Her son was the means of the conversion of Claudius Buchanan, who subsequently became a minister of the Gospel, and went to the East Indies. Here he occupied a responsible station; and his labors in behalf of the English population, and for the improvement of the moral and spiritual condition of the natives, are deservedly ranked among the noblest achievements of Christian philanthropy. His little work entitled The Star in the East, was the first thing that attracted the attention of Adoniram Judson to a mission in the East Indies.

Such are some of the glorious results of one holy woman's efforts to educate her son for God — a wide and mighty posthumous influence which an angel might feel honored to exert. Who was she? The mother of Rev. John Newton.

"Mother! How many delightful associations cluster around that word! The innocent smiles of infancy, the gambols of boyhood, and the happiest hours of riper years! When my heart aches at the world's wickedness, and my limbs are weary, and my feet bloody, traveling the thorny path of life, I am accustomed to sit down and close my eyes, and send my spirit back to the days of early life." — Thomson.

"The mother's heart is the child's school-room." — Beecher.

22—24. (22) When, etc., evidently referring to the "law of obedience" to parental counsels, not to the mere amulet. goest . . sleepest . . awakest, terms representing the variety of the experiences of the traveler, through all which high moral principles will keep and bless.[c] (23) lamp,[d] "the 'commandment' is any special or particular injunction which commands what is to be done and forbids what is to be left undone. The 'law' is the whole law of God in its entirety; not here the Law of Moses technically, but the whole system of generalized instruction. They stand, therefore, in the same relation to each other as 'a lamp' and 'light,' the one being particular, and the other general. 'Light' is light in general, as the light of the day and the sun, while 'lamp' is a particular light which is enkindled at some other source."— Pul. Com. the law, of moral purity. light, revealing temptation, and the paths of sin. reproofs, or convictions of error.[e] way of life, i. e. conduce to length of life. (24) evil woman, woman of evil, ch. ii. 16. flattery, that would entice thee to evil ways,[f] lit. from the smoothness of the tongue of the strange woman.

a Like the fillets of the law, prayer-bands.

b "Perhaps the superstition most common at present is that of charms. People of every rank and station in society, and of every creed and sect, employ them. They are hung round the neck, or hid away in the bosom." — Thomson.

c "The word of God will be our guide, guard, and companion."— Matt. Henry.

d Ps cxix 105.

e "Trans. "And in the way of life is admonitory discipline."—Müller.

f "The description of the young man's temptress and her beguiling and fascinating methods is so life-like and minute, that it needs neither ex-

God's word. — I. In action, our guide. II. In danger, our defense. III. In loneliness, our companion. — Clarkson.

The fisherman and the light. — There was a fisherman whose hut was situated on high and rock-bound coast. Near by was a snug cove, with a smooth, sandy beach, where he was accustomed to draw up his little boat, and from which he went forth, day by day, to engage in his toilsome occupation, on the waters of the stormy sea. One day he went out, as usual, to spend the day in fishing. He toiled on, till towards the close of the afternoon, he saw threatening signs of an approaching storm. With a brave and trusting heart, he turned the bow of his boat in the right direction, and began to row towards home. But darker and darker grew the heavens above him; and soon all traces of daylight had disappeared. The outline of the coast had faded from his view, and he could no longer see any of those well-known landmarks by which he was accustomed to direct his course. The storm raged fiercer, and the night grew darker. Hope died away within him, and death stared him in the face. But just then a faint ray of light met his eye. It renewed his strength. He rowed on more heartily. Very soon he found that it proceeded from the window of his own little hut. It guided him to the cove he was accustomed to enter. He drew his boat up safely on the sand, and, grateful for his own deliverance, before he went to bed that night he trimmed the lamp, and filled it with oil, and set it in the window of his humble dwelling, that its friendly light might shine out upon the stormy sea, and perhaps guide some other tempest-tossed voyager to a place of safety. And as long as he lived he continued this practice. It was very proper that he should do this. He made a right use of the lamp himself, and then he tried to extend the benefit of it to others. And this is just what we should do. We have God's wonderful lamp. It is shining all about our path. It shows us how we may sail over life's stormy sea, so as to reach the haven of enduring rest and safety at last. But there are multitudes of our fellow-creatures who are tossed on this tempestuous sea, without a single ray of light to guide their way. What is our duty? Should we not send this wonderful lamp to them? This is all they need. It is abundantly able to guide them to the only place where they can find safety. — Rills fr. Fountain of Life.

25, 26. (25) Lust, the term for vehement and unbridled desire.[a] take thee, as in a trap. eyelids, wh. Eastern women paint to enhance their beauty.[b] "With which she throws amorous and captivating glances at her lover." — Zöckler. (26) whorish, strictly one who sells herself for hire. piece of bread, the sign of uttermost poverty. adulteress, the abandoned woman who is unfaithful as a wife is ever more violent and ruinous than the harlot. hunt, lay snares for; take, as fish, with a hook, i. e. "allures to that wh. may cost a man his life." — Stuart, cf. De. xxii. 22.

Note on verses 24-35. — The arguments against the sin in question are cogent in their dissuasiveness, and none stronger of a purely temporal nature could be devised. It may be objected that the sin is not put forward in the higher light, as an offense before God, and that the appeal is made simply on the lines of self-interest: but who will deny that the scope of the teaching is distinctly moral, or that mankind is influenced and dissuaded from sin by such a category of evils as includes personal beggary, dishonor and death? — Pul. Com. — Evil. — As a man that cutteth with a dull knife is the cause of cutting, but not of the ill-cutting and hacking of the knife — the knife is the cause of that: or if a man strike upon an instrument that is out of tune, he is the cause of the sound, but not of the jarring sound — that is the fault of the untuned strings; or, as a man riding upon a lame horse, stirs him — the man is the cause of the motion, but the horse himself of the halting motion; thus God is the author of every action, but not of the evil of that action — that is from man. He that makes instruments and tools of iron or other metal, he maketh not the rust and canker which corrupteth them, that is from another cause; nor doth that heavenly workman, God Almighty, bring in sin and iniquity; nor can he be justly blamed if his creatures do soil and besmear themselves with the foulness of sin, for he made them good. — Spencer.

27–29. (27) take, breaking physical laws absolutely insures physical penalties; quite as certainly moral woe follows on moral transgressions.[c] (28) go, or walk. (29) So, etc., "so inconceivable is it that the adulterer should follow his unlawful intercourse without evil consequences and just retribution."[d] innocent, R. V., "unpunished."

planation nor comment." — Dav. Thomas.

"'All God's biddings are enablings,' says an early Christian writer. An obedient soul is like a crystal glass with a light in the midst, which shines forth through every part thereof." — T. Brooks.

"'How is it,' said a friend to a learned physician, 'that amidst much employment and continual exercise of mind you preserve such unruffled tranquillity?' 'It is,' said he, 'because I give the first hour of every morning to the Holy Scriptures and to prayer'" — Bullar.

"For character groweth day by day, and all things aid it in unfolding, and the bent unto good or evil may be given in the hours of infancy" — Tupper.

a Matt. v. 28.

b "This probably refers to the care with which women in the East paint their eyelids, in a great measure in order to captivate the men, who, from the manner in which they are muffled up can often see no more of their person than their eyes — which may, indeed, be one reason why so much pains are taken to set them off." — Hom. Com

2 Ki. ix. 30.

"We begin to die when we begin to do wrong. Every step we take in a wrong direction disqualifies us from advancing in an upward movement." — People's Bib.

c Ga. vi. 7, 8.

d "He that keeps company with those of ill-fame, that goes in with them and touches them cannot long preserve his innocency, he thrusts himself into temptation, and so throws himself out of God's protection."—Matt Henry.

'Even God is said to be unable to use force against necessity."—Plato.

"Necessity is stronger far than art"—Æschylus.

Evil associations corrupting. — On the moors of Yorkshire there is a stream of water, which goes by the name of the "Ochre Spring." It rises high up in the hills, and runs on bright and sparkling for a short distance, when it suddenly becomes a dark and muddy yellow. What is the reason of this? Why, it has been passing through a bed of ochre, and so it flows on for miles, thick and sluggish, useless and unpleasant. The world is full of such "beds of ochre." Sinful companions bad books — all such things are just like beds of ochre; connection with them is pollution. — Old Test. Anecs. — Effects of evil habits. — At the first arrival of the Europeans in America it was not uncommon to find Indians who were above a hundred years old. They lived frugally and drank pure water. Brandy, rum, wine, and all the other strong liquors, were utterly unknown to them. But since the Christians have taught them to drink these liquors, and the Indians have found them but too palatable, those who cannot resist their appetites hardly reach half the age of their parents. — Whitecross.

30, 31. (30) despise a thief, regard him, i. e. with the same feeling as they do the other sinner.[a] hungry, the assumption is that hunger is the great impulse to stealing. But this is only the most mitigated form of stealing. (31) found, found out. sevenfold, Ex. xxii. 1-4. all the substance, if that is necessary to provide ample restitution.

Motive and responsibility. — I. Guilt is to be measured by motive. The starving pick-pocket is not so wicked as the well-to-do house-breaker. Even in the low depths of crime moral distinctions need to be observed, lest we do grievous injustice to our most unhappy fellow-men. The principle that guilt is commensurate with motive rests on the Christian conception of it as an inward fact. — Pul. Com.

a "The laws of modern society have reversed the maxims of the wise man and, to the dishonor of Christian nations, an adulterer, who steals what is most precious to a man, and what is irretrievable, is treated by the law with more lenity than a thief, who robs him of what is of comparatively little value, and may easily be replaced." — Wordsworth.

32, 33. (32) But whose, etc., "if men do not overlook but severely punish a crime which has been committed under extenuating circumstances, much less will they do so where the crime is of a much graver character and has nothing to excuse it." — Pul. Com. understanding, destitute both of moral principle and of prudence. destroyeth . . soul, lit. "whoso will destroy his life, he will do this." "The fol'g vss. seem to indicate that it is the temporal life wh. is referred to." (33) wound and dishonour, better stripes and disgrace; stripes from the insulted husband, and shame from the people, who hoot the detected man. wiped away, he bears a perpetual brand of disgrace.

"This image would hardly occur to us, who never go barefoot, and are never or rarely exposed to any liability of treading upon burning coals If we desired to express the same sentiment by a similar image, we should say, 'Can one handle hot coals and not be burnt?'" — Kitto.

The foolish flies. — A dervish once went into a confectioner's shop. The confectioner, to honor him, poured some honey into a dish before him. Immediately a swarm of flies settled, as was their wont, upon the honey; some upon the edge of the dish, but the greater number in the middle. The confectioner then took up a whisk to drive them off, when those upon the side flew away with ease, but the others were prevented from rising by the honey clinging to their wings, and were involved in ruin. The dervish noticed this, and remarked, "That honey-dish is like the world, and the honey like its pleasures. Those who enjoy them with moderation and contentment, when the whisk of death approaches, not having their hearts filled with the love of them, can with ease escape its snare; while all who, like the foolish flies, have given themselves wholly to their sweetness, will meet with destruction." — Fr. the Hindustani.

"Believers do not regulate their marriage relation by caprice. They do not ask divorce at every gust of passion, as one does not amputate a limb bec. it is convulsed with pain"—Augustine.

34 35. (34) jealousy, that of the man whose home is ruined by the adulterer. not spare, when his chance of avenging himself may come. (35) ransom, to buy off from punishment the detected sinner: lit. "He will not accept the face of any ransom." gifts, in hope of appeasing his wrath.

"Trifles light as air, are to the jealous confirmations strong as proofs of Holy Writ."—Shakespeare.

"With groundless fear he thus his soul deceives, what frenzy dictates, jealousy believes."—Gay

The agony of jealousy. —

But through the heart
Should jealousy its venom once diffuse,
'Tis then delightful misery no more,
But agony unmix'd, incessant gall,
Corroding every thought, and blasting all Love's paradise. Ye fairy prospects then,
Ye beds of roses, and ye bowers of joy,
Farewell! — ye gleamings of departed peace,

Shine out your last! The yellow-tinging plague Internal vision taints, and in a night
Of livid gloom imagination wraps. — Thomson.

"The cold plunge into duty is momentary, the reaction is eternal."

CHAPTER THE SEVENTH.

1, 2. (1) My son, etc., the usual commencement of a new section: recalling the attention of the listeners. lay up, so as to be ready for use when temptation comes (2) apple . . eye, lit. as the little man in thine eye.[a] Obs. how carefully this is guarded by Nature with the eyelid, so carefully should instruction be treasured.

Love to the Holy Scriptures (vss. 1-4). — Show — I. The respect we should pay to the counsels of Divine wisdom. 1. They should be treasured up with diligence; 2. They should be watched over with care; 3. They should be kept ready for use; 4. They should be guarded with tenderest affection. II. The benefits which we shall derive from a due attention to them. 1. We shall be delivered from evil; 2. We shall be carried forward in safety to everlasting life. — Simeon.

The Bible a guide. —

Star of Eternity! the only star
By which the bark of man can navigate
The sea of life, and gain the coast of bliss
Securely, the only star which rose on time,
And on its dark and troubled billows still,
As generation, drifting swiftly by,
Succeeded generation, threw a ray
Of heaven's own light, and to the hills of God —
The eternal hills — pointed the sinner's eye. — Pollok.

a "The pupil of the eye is the emblem of a precious possession guarded with peculiarly watchful care. See De. xxxii. 10; Ps. xvii. 8." — Otto Zöckler.

"The instruction of the Word is the same to the soul which the eye is to the body. For as the body without the sight of the eyes runneth upon many things that hurt it, and falleth at every little stumbling-block, so the soul most fearfully runneth into sins if it want the light and direction of the Word." — Muffet.

3—5. (3) Bind . . fingers, as were the words of the law to be bound by the Mosaic injunction.[b] Or, as inscriptions upon rings, which they could take with them everywhere. tables, i. e. tablets, so as not to be erased. (4) wisdom, wh. had previously been personified as a woman, a queen. sister,[c] the word suggests simple and pure relationship and intercourse. kinswoman, or friend: the one known by thee, in familiar intercourse. (5) keep thee, by engaging and absorbing all thine interests, and by giving thee timely warnings and good advice. strange woman, ch. v. 3.

Authenticity of the Bible. — There are four grand arguments for the truth of the Bible. I. The miracles it records. II. The prophecies it contains. III. The goodness of the doctrine. IV. The moral character of the penman. The miracles flow from Divine power, the prophecies from Divine understanding, the excellence of the doctrine from Divine goodness, and the moral character of the penman from Divine purity. Thus the Bible stands upon four immovable pillars — the power, the understanding, the goodness, and the purity of God. — D. Simpson.

Adaptation of the Bible. — It is indeed an admirable evidence of the truth and Divine origin of the sacred volume, that for its important practical purposes — especially for the great end of the soul's salvation — it is just as intelligible to the humble but pious cottager as it is to the most learned and cultivated among mankind. The rough Greenlander and Esquimaux, the untutored inhabitant of New Zealand or Otaheite, the wandering North American Indian, the superstitious and degraded Hindoo and Chinese, the Hottentot of South Africa, the negro and Malagassee — ignorant and uncultivated man in almost every part of the world — have all been found capable, with the aid of the most simple Christian teaching, of understanding the Holy Scriptures, so far as relates to their main purpose — I mean that of instructing us in the knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ our Lord; and the same book has been the means of imparting the same knowledge to the polite and civilized Greek and Roman, as well as to the Bacons, Lockes, Boyles, Addisons and Newtons of the modern times — the most refined and philosophical of our species. — J. J. Gurney.

b De. vi. 8; xi. 18.

c Matt. xii. 50.

"There is not a son of Adam, whatever his condition may be, whether in prosperity or in adversity, in temptation or deliverance, in health or sickness, but he may find in this Book some balmy comfort to the quieting of his conscience and to the advancement of his salvation." — T. Banks.

"The father exhorts the son to bind the paternal commandments upon his fingers. It appears that the thong of the phylactery for the left arm was wound seven times round it and as many times round the middle finger. This represents the idea of trusting to other than merely human power, and being well prepared against the day of danger."—Parker.

6—9. "To show the greatness of the danger the writer gives an actual example of what had passed before his own eyes." (6) window, "the latticed opening of the kiosk of an Eastern house, overlooking the street." This latticed arrangement was necessary for the circulation of fresh air. casement, R. V., "lattice." (7) simple ones, young and thoughtless persons, inexperienced and idling, who too easily put themselves in the way of temptation. void of understanding, better, discernment. (8) corner, street-corners being always favored meeting-places. went, etc., sauntered along the way by her house: like buzzing moth, putting himself in the way of temptation.[a] (9) twilight, the later evening, fr. nine to twelve o'clock.[b] in . . night, lit. "in the pupil of the eye of night," i. e. midnight.

A word in season. — One Sabbath morning, while the late Rev. Dr. Bedell, of Philadelphia, was preaching, a young man passed by with a number of companions as gay and thoughtless as himself. One of them proposed to go into the church, saying, "Let us go and hear what this man has to say, that everybody is running after." The young man made this awful answer, "No, I would not go into such a place if Christ Himself was preaching." Some weeks after, he was again passing the church, and being alone, and having nothing to do, he thought he would go in without being observed. On opening the door, he was struck with awe at the solemn silence of the place, though it was much crowded. Every eye was fixed on the preacher, who was to begin his discourse. His attention was instantly caught by the text — Prov. vii. 7. His conscience was smitten by the power of truth. He saw that he was the young man described. A view of his profligate life passed before his eyes; and for the first time he trembled under the feeling of sin. He remained in the church till the preacher and congregation had passed out, then slowly returned to his home. He had early received infidel principles; but the Holy Spirit, who had aroused him in his folly, led him to a constant attendance on the ministry of Dr. B., who had been the instrument of awakening his mind. He cast away his besetting sin, and gave himself to a life of virtue and holiness. He afterwards declared openly his faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and his desire to devote himself to His service.— Courting temptation. — Those who carry gunpowder upon their persons ought never to go into a blacksmith's forge, ought never even to approach the door lest some sparks fall upon them. How much more foolish is he who, knowing that there is a tendency to sin within him, seeks out the place where the spark will be fanned into a flame. — Preacher's Com.

10—12. (10) met . . woman, in the East women are kept secluded and do not appear at night, or unattended. attire, peculiar in form and colors, so as to attract attention. harlot, Ge. xxxiv. 31. subtil, Ge. iii. 1, wary, cunning, "one whose heart is guarded and inaccessible, who locks up her plans and counsels deep in her breast." (11) loud, prob. bustling, or bold. stubborn, fretting against the pure restraints of home, not submissive. in her house, where every right-minded, modest housewife ought to be in the night time.[c] (12) streets, where we might be sure she only intends wantonness and mischief. lieth in wait, figure of one hunting for prey.

Profligacy. — I. It is a desecration of the temple of God. It is a sin against God as well as an offense against society. But they who are in danger of falling should remember the solemn words of St. Paul, and the lofty point of view from which he regards the subject (1 Cor. vi. 18, 19). The Christian is a temple of the Holy Spirit, II. It is ruinous to any one who succumbs to it. Its ruins the mind, degrading the whole tone and energy of thought. It is the most gross and disastrous dissipation. It ruins the physical health. It ruins wholesome interest in pure delights. It ruins business prospects. It ruins reputation. It ruins the soul. III. It is heartlessly cruel. The heaviest guilt lies with the tempter. When a man has deluded and ruined a woman, society regards the woman with loathing and contempt, while the man often escapes with comparative impunity. This is one of the grossest instances of injustice that the future judgment will surely rectify. But in any case of profligacy great selfishness and cruelty are shown. IV. It is fatal to sound social order. It is a gangrene in society, eating out its very heart. Nothing more surely undermines the true welfare of a people. It is fatal to the sanctities of the home. — Pul. Com.

13—15. (13) caught him, as if in playful joke. kissed him, as if she cared for him. impudent face, or "she strengthened her face;" putting on a most bold and brazen look. (14) peace . . me, lit. peace offerings are upon

[a] "The verb used is fairly chosen, as it always expresses a certain care and intention in his going. We say, substantially, 'he measures his steps, he paces before her door.'"—Umbreit.

[b] "Young, 'simple,' in the bad sense of the word; open to all impressions of evil; empty-headed and empty-hearted; lounging near the house of ill-repute, not as yet deliberately purposing to sin, but placing himself in the way of it, wandering idly to see one of whose beauty he had heard."—Spk. Com.

"God is ever at His window, His casement is always open to see what thou dost."—Jermin.

"Foolish men think to hide themselves from God, by hiding God from themselves."—Trapp.

[c] Tit. ii. 5.

"There is not a more tried shaft in all Satan's quiver than this: a persuasion to men to bear themselves too bold upon the favor of God. 'Thou art the elect and redeemed of God; sin because grace hath abounded; sin, that it may abound. Thou art safe enough though thou offend; be not too much an adversary to thine own liberty.'"—Hall.

"Dress drains our cellar dry, and keeps our larder lean."—Cowper.

"Begin, then, first with little things,
The smallest sin avoid and hate."—Spitta.

me.[a] Her way of saying she had a religious feast on that night, and would be glad for him to come and share. (15) to meet thee, so as to give thee a personal invitation.

Modesty. —

In distant climes a plant there grows,
Which from the touch its leaves will close,
And trembling turn itself away
If aught approach its fragile spray ;
Its kindred plant they say abides
Unseen our northern clime beneath.
From ev'ry idle gaze it hides,
And shrinks at ev'ry ruder breath ;
Amid the snows it thrives the best
Which guard the virgin's spotless breast.
'Tis Modesty ! a lovelier flow'r
Than spring's first snowdrop, born 'mid February's show'r.
— Holford.

16–18. (16) coverings, etc., R. V., marg. "cushions." carved, this word is better connected with the previous sentence, "variegated coverings of tapestry," or with the following.[b] fine linen, for wh. Egypt was noted. (17) perfumed, etc., the Eastern love of strong scents is remarkable, and they are used as incentives to passion. cinnamon, imported prob. fr. Ceylon.

Eastern beds. — The time for taking our repose was now come, and we were conducted into another large room, in the middle of which was a kind of bed, without bedstead or curtains. Though the coverlet and pillows exceeded in magnificence the richness of the sofa, which likewise ornamented the apartment, I foresaw that I could expect but little rest on this bed, and had the curiosity to examine its make in a more particular manner. Fifteen mattresses of quilted cotton, about three inches thick, placed one upon another, formed the groundwork, and were covered by a sheet of Indian linen, sewed on the last mattress. A coverlet of green satin, adorned with gold embroidered in embossed work, was in like manner fastened to the sheets ; the ends of which, turned in, were sewed down alternately. Two large pillows of crimson satin, covered with the like embroidery, in which there was no want of gold or spangles, rested on two cushions of the sofa, brought near to serve for a back, and intended to support our heads. The taking of the pillows entirely away would have been a good resource, if we had had any bolster ; and the expedient of turning the other side upwards having only served to show they were embroidered in the same manner on the bottom, we at last determined to lay our handkerchiefs over them, which, however, did not prevent our being very sensible of the embossed ornaments underneath. — Baron du Tott.

19, 20. (19) goodman, or husband. So she assures him that there is safety from fear of detection. (20) a bag of money, so plainly intends to be away a long time. day appointed, R.V., "at the full moon;" vs. 9 indicates that it would be some while before that time.

Pleasures that end in death. — There are some pleasures that bring pain as their fruit, just as things standing in the sunshine throw from them a black shadow. They are like the smooth, beautiful serpent, they carry a sting. Fable tells of a bee that found a pot of honey ready made, and thought it would be fine to save all the trouble of flying about the meadows and gather ing its sweet stores, little by little, out of the cups of flowers, and began to sip out of the dish. Then it went on and reveled in the sweets ; but when it began to get tired and cloyed, it found, poor bee ! that its wings were all clogged and would not open, nor could it drag its body out of the mass. So it died, buried in pleasure. — Edmond.

21–23. (21) fair speech, the word employed is that usually trans. doctrine. "The use of the same word has a keen irony about it wh. it is difficult to convey in another language." forced him, to get over all his prudence, his virtue, and his fears. caused . . yield, "she netted him." — Jerome. (22) straightway, as by a sudden impulse. as an ox, blindly, not thinking that he is going to his destruction. as a fool, goes on his foolish way, never thinking that the penalties must come. (23) liver, put for the vitals gener-

[a] "The harlot uses the technical word (Lev. iii. 1) for the 'peace-offerings,' and makes them the starting point for her sin. They have to be eaten on the same day that they are offered."—Spk. Com.

"To trample on what is finest in ourselves is to clothe all life with mourning." — W. H. Thorne.

[b] "Striped coverlets of linen of Egypt."

"Her coverings of tapestry could not cover her naughtiness, her carved work could not embellish her own deformed work, her white Egyptian linen could not make white her black Egyptian soul" — Jermin.

"That modest grace subdu'd my soul, that chastity of look which seems to hang, a veil of purest light, o'er all her beauties, and by forbidding most inflames desires."—Young.

Jerome writes of a brave woman, who being upon the rack, bade her persecutors do their worst, for she was resolved to die rather than lie.

"But what if death draw the curtains, and look in the while? If death do not, yet guilt will." — Trapp.

"Our only security is in high and useful employment We ought to be able to say with Nehemiah to every tempter and to every enemy, 'I am doing a great work, and cannot come down.'" — Peop. Bib.

"Think'st thou there are no serpents in the world but those who slide along the grassy sod, and sting the luckless foot that presses them? There are who in the path of social life do bask their spotted skins in fortune's sun, and sting the soul."—Joanna Baillie.

"No man means to go the whole length. A man's will is not destroyed in an instant; it is taken from him, as it were, little by little, and almost imperceptibly; he imagines that he is as strong as ever, and says that he will go out and shake himself as at other times, not knowing that the spirit of might has gone from him."—Parker.

"I can bear scorpions' stings, tread fields of fire; be toss'd aloft through tracts of endless void, but cannot live in shame."—Joanna Baillie.

"It is better to learn by the awful example of others than by our own suffering. Experience keeps a dear school, but fools will learn in no other."—Fausset.

As the nature of trees and plants, of their roots, stocks, stems, and boughs, is in the seed; so the cause of our transgressions is our own corruption, whereby we are moved to do evil, and hindered to do good.

ally, i. e. "this youth followed the adulteress till his liver is thoroughly inflamed."—Pul. Com.

A life of degradation.—Degradation means the application of a thing to purposes lower than that for which it was intended. It is a degradation to a man to live on husks, because they are not his true food. We call it degradation when we see the members of an ancient family, decayed by extravagance, working for their bread. It is not degradation for a born laborer to work for an honest livelihood. And, therefore, for a man to be degraded, it is not necessary that he should have given himself up to low and mean practices. It is quite enough that he is living for purposes lower than those for which God intended him. He may be a man of unblemished reputation, and yet debased in the truest meaning of the word. We were sent into this world to love God and to love man; to do good; to fill up life with deeds of generosity and usefulness; and he that refuses to work out that high destiny is a degraded man. He may turn away revolted from everything that is gross. His sensuous indulgences may be all marked by refinement and taste. His house may be filled with elegance. His library may be adorned with books. There may be the sounds in his mansion which can regale the ear, the delicacies which can stimulate the palate, and the forms of beauty which can please the eye. There may be nothing in his whole life to offend the most chastened and fastidious delicacy; and yet, if the history of all this be, powers frittered upon time which were meant for eternity, the man is degraded; if the spirit which was created to find its enjoyment in the love of God has settled down satisfied with the love of the world, then that man has turned aside from a celestial feast to prey on garbage.—Robertson.

24, 25. (24) Hearken, making a most impressive application. (25) decline, from the counsels and the principles of wisdom and of purity.

Warnings.—A certain Jew had formed a design to poison Luther, but was disappointed by a faithful friend, who sent Luther a portrait of the man, with a warning against him. By this, Luther knew the murderer and escaped his hands. Thus the word of God, O Christian, shows thee the face of those lusts which Satan employs to destroy thy comforts and poison thy soul.—G. S. Bowes.—Care of our hearts.—We strive to have in our gardens the most beautiful flowers, and the finest flavored fruit, but we are careful to have no poison vine, however brilliant its colors, trail over the flowers, no poison berries, however tempting to the sight, hang side by side with the fruit. Let us take at least as good care of our minds and hearts as we do of our gardens.—F. S. Schenck.

26, 27. (26) cast down, as on a field of battle. strong men, better, mighty host. LXX., "innumerable are her slain." Stuart, "if even the mighty are destroyed by her, how can the mere youngling expect to come off with impunity." (27) to hell, R. V., "sheol," ch. ii. 18, v. 5.

Hell.—That there is a hell no man of experience can deny,—a hell here; a hell of remorse, self-reproach, appalling memory, hopelessness—a despair compared with which all darkness is as midday. How difficult to forewarn men with any success! The exhorter himself has been overwhelmed, the teacher victimized, the saintliest soul is conscious of a ministry not divine. Still on every hand the word of exhortation and persuasion must be spoken, and the prayer of entreaty must be breathed with eagerness and passion if haply one soul may be rescued from the way to hell and the chambers of death.—R. F. Horton.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTH.

1—3. (1) cry, making also her good and gracious invitations to the young. put . . voice, loudly and persuasively.[a] (2) high places, fr. which the passers-by may be observed. places of the paths, R. V., "where the paths meet." (3) gates, where so many are coming and going. coming . . doors, at the very entrance of the city, so as to secure all.

The voice of Divine wisdom (vss. 1–14).—I. It is a voice striving for the ear of all. She cries—1. In the most commanding scenes of life; 2. In the ordinary thoroughfares of life; 3. In the most crowded districts of life. II. It is a voice worthy of the ear of all; because her communications are—1. Perfect; 2. Intelligible; 3. Precious; 4. Exhaustless; 5. Rectifying; 6; Original.—Thomas.

[a] "The publicity and universality of the call contrast with the secrecy with intrigues of the wicked."—Fausset.

"Wisdom is seen everywhere in the material universe, but her sublimest revelation is in the person of the Son of God."—Dav. Thomas.

Note on verse 1. — It is one thing to be ignorant: another to have refused to learn. For not to know is only ignorance; to refuse to learn is pride. And they are the less able to plead ignorance in excuse, the more that knowledge is set before them, even against their will. We might, perhaps, be able to pass along the way of this present life in ignorance of this Wisdom, if she herself had not stood in the corners of the way. — St. Gregory. — Note on verse 3. — It is a fine picture of the comprehensiveness of the Gospel, which is meant for high and low, prince and peasant; which is proclaimed everywhere, in the courts of kings, in the lanes of the country, in the hovels of the city; which sets forth the infinite love of God, who is not willing that any should perish, but would have all men come to the knowledge of the truth (2 Pet. iii. 9). — Pul. Com. — Wisdom described.—Wisdom, unlike the vicious woman who lurks in the twilight at the corner of the street which contains her lair, stands in the open places; she makes herself as manifest as may be by occupying some elevated position, from which her ringing voice may be heard down the streets and up the cross-ways, and may attract the attention of those who are entering the city gates or the doors of the houses. As her voice is strong and clear, so her words are full and rounded: there is no whispering, no muttering, no dark hint, no subtle incitement to secret pleasures; her tone is breezy and stirring as the dawn; there is something about it which makes one involuntarily think of the open air, and the wide sky, and the great works of God. — Exp. Bib.

"A very vivid instance of personification is this. Wisdom and understanding are represented as living agents, ministries that can be seen, apostles sent from the hills of light that they may speak of glory and beauty and pureness to the children who dwell in the valleys of darkness. What answer can we make to this interrogation? A distinct and emphatic reply that it is even so." — Peop. Bib.

4–6. (4) men . . sons of man, a distinction is perhaps designed between the stronger and experienced, and the weaker and inexperienced. (5) simple, "those not yet perverted, but easily influenced for good or evil." wisdom, or subtlety in a good sense; prudence; rules of self-restraint, and pure ordering of life. fools, the intellectually heavy and dull. understanding, or discerning. (6) excellent things, princely things, such as are suitable for a prince.[a] right, and tending to righteousness.[b]

A scoffer. — A scoffing infidel of considerable talents, being once in the company of a person of slender intellect, but of genuine piety, and supposing no doubt that he should obtain an easy triumph in the display of his ungodly wit, put the following question to him: "I understand, sir, that you expect to go to Heaven when you die; can you tell me what sort of a place Heaven is?" "Yes, sir;" replied the Christian; "Heaven is a prepared place for a prepared people; and if your soul is not prepared for it, with all your boasted wisdom you will never enter there."

a "The sense is — I will speak of the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven." — Wordsworth.

b "This wisdom is ever in the world. Her voice is everywhere; it rings through the ages. It is high above all the tumults of the nations. The voices of generations are hushed in graveyards and in seas, but this voice sounds on; it cannot be silenced."— Dav. Thomas.

7–9. (7) speak, R. V., "utter." wickedness, not untruth only, but all kinds of enticement to wrong-doing. (8) froward, lit. wreathed; twisted. contradictory to truth. (9) that understandeth, who is wise enough not to despise, but to open his heart to receive, the counsels of wisdom. The man who wishes to order his life by the teachings of wisdom.[c] right, lit. "before one's eyes," i. e. they make the path straight, without stumbling blocks.

The word "froward." — Froward is used by our translators for five Hebrew words, of which two have the force of turning aside, and the other three of being twisted or perverted. The majority of instances are in the Proverbs. According to Wedgwood it properly means "from-ward," as opposed to "toward." Hence "toward" as an adjective is used in a favorable sense. The two words are opposed in Taming of the Shrew, act. v., scene 2:

Vincentio. — 'Tis a good hearing, when children are toward.

Lucentio. — But a harsh hearing, when women are froward.

Preaching self, and Christ. — When Bernard had once preached a very eloquent sermon on a public occasion, the people greatly applauded him; but his own mind was much dejected. On the following day he again preached, but with the utmost simplicity, which did not so well please his audience. When spoken to on the subject, he declared his conviction that in the latter instance only had he discharged his duty; "for," added he, "yesterday I preached Bernard, but to-day Jesus Christ."

c "Those who discern things that differ, who know good and evil, readily subscribe to the rectitude of all Wisdom's dictates, and therefore without murmuring or disputing, govern themselves by them."— Matt. Henry.

Is. xxxv. 8.

"If aught in God's Word does not seem to us right, it is because we have not found true knowledge. He who would have the sealed book opened to him must ask it of the Lamb who opens the book."— Fausset.

10, 11. (10) not silver, i. e. as being preferable to gaining silver. knowledge, practical knowledge for the guidance of life is meant. choice gold, tried, selected, precious. (11) wisdom, etc., comp. Job xxviii. 15; Ps. xix. 10; Pr. iii. 15. rubies, peninim, prob. pearls.

"Some persons proceed as if they expected to obtain wisdom as some Chinese philosophers thought oysters got their pearls, by gaping."

"All arts among men are the rays of Divine wisdom falling upon them. Whatsoever wisdom there is in the world, it is but a shadow of the wisdom of God."—Charnock.

Worth of wisdom. — If the mountains were pearl, if every sand of the sea were a diamond, it were not comparable to wisdom. Without wisdom a person is like a ship without a pilot, in danger to split upon rocks. The price of wisdom is above rubies. The ruby is a precious stone, transparent, of a red, fiery color. It is reported of one of the kings of India, he wore a ruby of that bigness and splendor, that he might be seen by it in the dark; but wisdom casts a more sparkling color than the ruby, it makes us shine as angels.

12, 13. (12) prudence, or subtlety, the wisdom of the serpent, wh. our Lord commended.[a] of witty inventions, R. V., "and discretion," i. e. "wisdom presides over all well-considered designs. She has and uses the knowledge of them." — Pul. Com. (13) fear . . evil, hating evil is one sure sign of it. (Job i. 1). pride, opposed to the supreme virtue of humility. evil way, i. e. sins of conduct, in contrast with the spiritual sin of pride. froward, perverse, ch. ii. 12; vi. 14.

"Wisdom is the olive that springeth from the heart, bloometh on the tongue, and beareth fruit in the actions."—Grymestone.

Fear of the Lord.—

Lord, for the erring thought
Not into evil wrought;
Lord, for the wicked will Betrayed and baffled still;
For the heart from itself kept,—
Our thanksgiving accept.

For ignorant hopes that were Broken to our blind prayer;
For pain, death, sorrow sent Unto our chastisement;
For all loss of seeming good,— Quicken our gratitude.—W. D. Howells.

"Knowledge may not be as a courtesan, for pleasure and vanity only; or as a bond-woman, to acquire and gain for her master's use; but as a spouse, for generation, fruit, and comfort." — Lord Bacon.

a vs. 15, Heb. rozenim; vs. 16, Heb. sarim.

Da. ii. 21; Ro. xiii 1-6.

14—16. (14) sound wisdom, Heb. tushiyyah, the very essence of things, whence they derive their soundness and strength.—Wordsworth. Comp. ch. ii. 7. have strength, as a possession, result, or attribute of wisdom. Understanding is a constant source of power, cf. Is. ix. 6; xi. 2. (15) By me, or in the exercise of wisdom only can rulers maintain authority. princes, lit. those who engrave just decrees. (16) princes, a different word from that in former vs.[a] This means leaders, commanders. judges, judgment was one of the prin. duties of a king.

"This wisdom is ever in the world. Her voice is everywhere; it rings through the ages. It is high above the tumults of the nations. The voices of generations are hushed in graveyards and in seas; but this voice sounds on; it cannot be silenced."—Dav. Thomas.

Authority of Divine wisdom.— This language may be considered as implying (1) that human government, in all its branches, is the appointment of Divine wisdom. 2. That all who sustain positions of authority and power should be habitually under the influence of Divine wisdom. 3. That no authority can be rightly exercised, and no judicial process successfully carried out, without the direction of wisdom. 4. That Divine wisdom exercises control over all human agents in the administration of public affairs.—Wardlaw.

The all-wise God. — He is best able to counsel, none like Him. He is a wonderful Counselor. He is furnished with knowledge, wisdom, faithfulness; He sees, observes, considers, understands all things, with their consequences and causes. He is engaged to counsel. His goodness engages Him; this will not suffer poor souls blindly to run upon their own ruin. His truth engages Him: He must be as good as His word; He has promised to guide the meek.—Barker (1659).

b Comp. Jno. xiv. 21; Mat. vii 7, 8.

17. I love, "Div. wisdom has heart as well as intellect; it glows with sympathies as well as radiates with counsels. Love is its genius, its root, its essence."[b] love me, bec. love secures the devotion of the whole being. We give ourselves wholly to those whom we love. seek me early, R. V., "diligently," as one who rises early to accomplish a purpose.[b]

Motives to early piety (vs. 17).— I. God has given you peculiar encouragements to seek Him while you are young. II. Youth is for many reasons incomparably the best time for seeking the Lord. III. God has a right to your best services. IV. Let me urge upon you the happiness you will secure by having God for your friend. V. Let me urge upon you the danger of delay. VI. A distinguished place in heaven is the certain result of early piety. — Payson. — Finding for seeking. — 1. We must seek Christ if we would possess Him. He offers Himself to all as a Saviour and Master. But He must be b Illus. of early seekers after God, Joseph, Samuel, David, Obadiah, Josiah, Daniel.

"Give God the blossom of your life; put Him not off with the fallen leaves."—Nicholls.

"Early life is the time to seek wisdom. Our moral metal is fluid in youth, and we can followed and found. 2. The search for Christ must be earnest if it is to be successful. He will not answer a half-hearted call. Till we seek Him with determination, reality, persistency, we shall meet no response. 3. This earnest seeking will be rewarded by the receiving of Christ. Better than any thing that Christ could send us will be His own coming to dwell in our hearts. This will be the satisfaction of anxious inquiry in a full response, the blessing of love with love and close communion. — Pul. Com.

Early conversions. — This is the image of the text: They that seek Me in the dawn shall find Me; they that seek Me at daybreak; they that come after Me ere the dew be risen shall find Me, and we shall have a long morning talk together: when the soul is young, when the life is free, when the heart is unsophisticated, they that seek Me in the dawn shall find Me, for I have been waiting for them, yea, standing by them whilst they were sleeping, and hoping that at the moment of waking they would see Me, and exclaim, Blessed Spirit, take charge of my poor, frail life all the day, and tell me what I ought to do. Fool is he who begins the day prayerlessly, who takes his own life into his own hand; verily in doing so he puts his money into bags with holes in them, and at night he shall have nothing. — Parker. — Youthful piety. — Samuel was a little child when he ministered unto the Lord, and heard His voice. "And he grew, and the Lord was with him; and the Lord revealed Himself to Samuel at Shiloh." Paul, speaking of little Timothy, says, "From a child thou hast known the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus." These are examples left on record by the spirit of grace, to teach us what may be done, in the strength and wisdom of the Most High. The Holy Spirit never strikes more powerfully than in early childhood. The late Countess of Huntingdon was only a little child when she gave her heart to Christ; and she was not only rich in this world, but eminently "rich in faith, and an heir of the kingdom." Who can read the early conversion and life of the wife of President Edwards, and doubt her being a child of God? or the thrilling narrative which he gives of Phœbe Bartlett, a child but five years old? For seventy years she testified to God's love in revealing Himself to a child. In the late memoirs of Rev. Dr. Justin Edwards it is stated that the heavenly conversion and Christian spirit manifested in her last sickness were the means of spiritual life to this eminent servant of Christ. One who had long been a "mother in Israel," and whose deep spirituality and holy life had given her an extended influence of the happiest kind, was wont to say, she could not remember the time when she did not love Christ and find her greatest delight in doing His will. In her life and in her death she has given the most satisfactory evidence of religion pure and undefiled.

18, 19. (18) Riches, see ch. iii. 16. durable riches, lit. "old," "long accumulated," hence enduring, in opposition to the fleeting char. of worldly riches. righteousness, see vs. 20. (19) My fruit, comp. fig. ch. iii. 14, 18. fine gold, or refined gold from the ore. revenue, or return to those who trade with me.[a]

Wisdom of incomparable value. — If the choice should lie between wealth and wisdom, it is better far to choose the latter: for: 1. While wealth will not buy wisdom, wisdom will lead to wealth, later if not sooner, of one kind if not of another. 2. Wisdom itself is wealth: it is the possession of the mind, it is the inheritance of the soul, it is "durable riches and righteousness." — Pul. Com.

Knowledge and wisdom. —

Knowledge descries alone, wisdom applies;
That makes some fools, this maketh none but wise.
In my afflictions, knowledge apprehends
Who is the Author, what the cause and ends;
It finds that patience is my sad relief,
And that the hand that caused can cure my grief.
To rest contented here is but to bring Clouds without rain, and heat without a spring;
But sacred wisdom doth apply that good,
Which simple knowledge barely understood,
Wisdom concludes, and in conclusion proves That wheresoever God corrects he loves. — Quarles.

be run into any mould; in age it becomes hard as the granite, or the steel. It must be sought to be obtained, and the sooner in life the better." — Dav. Thomas.

"Queenly as she is, she condescends to woo them. Her invitations are general, even universal. And therefore if any do not find her, it is because they do not seek her; if any do not share in her rich gifts and graces, it is because they will not take the trouble to claim them." — Harper.

"Industry has a firmer muscle, is less annoyed by delays and repulses, and, like water, bends itself to the shape of the soil over which it flows, and if checked, will not rest, but accumulates, and mines a passage beneath, or seeks a side-race, or rises above and overflows the obstruction. What genius performs at one impulse, industry gains by a succession of blows. In ordinary matters they differ only in rapidity of execution, and are upon one level before men, who see the result but not the process." — H. W. Beecher.

a Re. iii. 18.

"It is His love to us that makes us to love Him; and, doubtless, He that loves us so as to make us to love Him, cannot but love us when we do love Him." — Jermin.

When King Demetrius had sacked and razed the city of Megæra to the very foundations, he demanded of Stilpo, the philosopher, what losses he had sustained. "None at all," said Stilpo, "for war can make no spoil of virtue."

20—21. (20) I lead, or walk, inviting others to follow. righteousness, essentially right paths, so right towards God, and right towards man. in the midst, etc., I swerve not to the one side or the other in the paths of equity. (21) inherit substance, all who seek wisdom are sure to find full satisfaction in wisdom herself.[a] But here earthly prosperity and success are promised.

Christ guides infallibly by—1. His word, It is all truth. 2. His spirit. Men mistake and think they are guided by God's spirit when they are guided by their own, or by a worse spirit. But certainly whom Christ's spirit guides He guides aright. 3. His example. All other men have their failings, and must be followed no further than they follow Christ. He is the original copy; others are but blurred extracts. — Francis Taylor.

The benefits of knowledge.— The more we extend our knowledge of the operations of the creative power, as manifested in the structure and economy of organized beings, the better we become qualified to appreciate the intentions with which the several arrangements and constructions have been devised, the art with which they have been accomplished, and the grand comprehensive plan of which they form a part. By knowing the general tendencies of analogous formations, we can sometimes recognize designs that are but faintly indicated, and trace the links which connect them with more general laws. By rendering ourselves familiar with the handwriting, where the characters are clearly legible, we gradually learn to decipher the more obscure passages, and are enabled to follow the continuity of the narrative through chapters that would otherwise appear mutilated and defaced. Hence the utility of comprehending in our studies the whole range of the organized creation, with a view to the discovery of final causes, and obtaining adequate ideas of the power, the wisdom, and the goodness of God.— Roget.

22—24. (22) possessed me, the best word for conveying the idea that wisdom was of the very essence of God from the absolute beginning. R. V., marg. "formed." in . . way, R. V., marg. "as the beg." Stuart, "the first-ling of his way," i. e. wisdom was the first act of God's creative agency. before his works, R. V., marg. "The first of" the things of the material creation. set up, Spk. Com. thinks should be, "I was anointed;" perhaps better is, "ordained," "inaugurated." "Wisdom was fr. everlasting exalted as ruler and disposer of all things."— Pul. Com. from the beginning, i. e. before God began the creation of this universe. (24) no depths, see Gen. i. At first there was but chaos, "emptiness and confusion."[b] abounding with, or laden with.

The Redeemer's delight in the children of men (vss. 23–31).— Define wisdom. I. The striking picture which is here presented. 1. Christ in His state of pre-existence; 2. The mutual affection and joy between Him and His father; 3. The feelings with which He regarded this lower world, and the beings by whom it was to be occupied. II. The important precepts which are here enforced. 1. Listen to His voice; 2. Perseverence in the pursuit; 3. Reward attending it; 4. Sin of those who reject the authority of Christ.

The imperfection of knowledge.— Among the Romans, Nasica was called Corculum for his pregnancy of wit; among the Grecians, Democritus Abderita was called wisdom itself; among the Britons, Gildas was called the sage; among the Jews, Aben Ezra was called Hechachan. They said of him that if knowledge had put out her candle, at his brain she might light it again; and that his head was the throne of wisdom. Among the Israelites was Ahithophel, whose counsel was an oracle. Here, now, was a pack of wise men; but why the Nile should overflow in the summer, when waters are at the lowest; or why the lodestone should draw iron to it, or incline to the polestar, — which of them, with all their knowledge, can give a reason of either? And as in human, so in Divine knowledge: the most acute and judicious have and must acknowledge their ignorance, and deplore their errors on divers points. We know but in part. If He that learned His divinity among the angels, to whom the Holy Ghost was an immediate tutor, knew but in part, it is well with us if we know but part of that part. — Spencer.

25, 26. (25) settled, Job xxviii. 9, xxxviii. 6. before the hills, Ps. xc. 2, fig. for great antiquity. (26) the earth, nor the fields, "the distinction intended is land as cultivated and occupied by buildings, etc., and waste uncultivated land outside towns." highest . . world, R. V., marg. "nor the scene," i. e. comprehensively for "all the mass of the earth's dust."

---

a "Wisdom being riches and honor, there is enough in wisdom's self to make a heritage of for them that love her. In fact, our eternal heirdom will be this peerless wisdom "—Miller. "Handfuls are gotten on the ground, but a soulful is not to be had except in Christ."

"The man of knowledge lives eternally after his death, while his members are reduced to dust beneath the tomb. But the ignorant man is dead, even while he walks upon the earth; he is numbered with living men, and yet existeth not."—Anon.

The noble personification of wisdom.

"Wisdom existing eternally in the Godhead, was said to be 'formed' or 'brought forth' when it operated in creation, and when it assumed human nature."

b "A world of waters, 'great deeps' lying in darkness, this was the picture of the remotest time of which man could form any conception, and yet the coexistence of the uncreated wisdom with the eternal Jehovah was before that."—Spk. Com.

"When we endeavor to discover the secrets of nature, we are searching out the wisdom of God. When we learn the laws and processes of nature, we are able to think the thoughts of God."—Pul. Com.

"Knowledge always desires increase; it is like fire, which must be first kindled by some external agent, but which will afterwards propagate itself."—Johnson.

From everlasting. — It was in the last times, that the Eternal Wisdom was set forth unto us, but it was from everlasting, that He was set up to be a king over us. It was in the fulness of time that He offered Himself for us, but it was from the beginning that He was anointed to be priest unto us. It was upon the earth that His gracious lips taught us, but it was before the earth was that He was ordained to be a prophet for us. It is in Him that all are chosen who come unto eternity, and He Himself was chosen from eternity. From everlasting he was set up our King, to set us up an everlasting kingdom. From the beginning was He anointed our priest, to anoint us in a priesthood that shall never end. Before the earth was, He was ordained our prophet, to order our feet in that way which shall bring us from earth to heaven; He was chosen that we might be the chosen people of God. — Jermin.

27—29. (27) prepared, established the firmament. a compass, or circle, referring to the great vault of heaven, which appears like a circle or a dome. (28) established the clouds, lit. made firm, or strong.[a] strengthened, etc. "the fountains of the abyss are the reservoirs of water above the firmament."—Stuart. (29) decree, R. V., "its bound;" comp. Job xxxviii. 4, 10, 11.[b] his commandment, or the shore He fixed for their restraint.

Magnitude of creation. — This earth wanders not alone; but a sweet fellowship of sister-spheres is bound together, cheering each other from afar, and from one telling it to all of a mutual law and indissoluble bond. Within the limits of this smaller economy burns the sun, so that in the act of creation, from which our abode arose, we necessarily include all the planetary apparatus, knowing that there the centre was fixed, and that each globe was launched in its circlings around it. The mundane and sublunary form only a little fragment of the work, an inferior department of the great transaction. And what are the few worlds which sweep with us about the same source of life and light? Massive, ponderous in themselves; some of them immensely larger than our own, running wider revolutions, and drawing after them brighter trains. But even this one solar family, recognizing and claiming members in the outskirts of space,— it is as nothing to what the eye can command, nothing to the visible! What constellations are thrown over the firmament in all the profusion of beauty and magnificence! And when the unaided sense has roamed to its utmost ken, and gazed to its utmost strength, it may call the instruments of science to its assistance, and it shall look out on ampler territories, and take hold of larger notices. Now we leave our nook. We speak in no terms of exaggeration when we describe what we see as beds, and floors, and clouds, of stars. As we pierce the awful altitudes, we ascend to new wonders. Apertures constantly open, and we are just suffered a glimpse into them. Heaven spreads above heaven, new arrangements stand revealed, and celestial bodies, in shapes hitherto undeveloped, flame as at the portal of the Eternal Throne, to guard its access and proclaim its terribleness. Yet even there are proofs that discovery has not closed its researches: still avenue verges from avenue, and height rises into height. And after all, this is but the outer court of "His high and holy place." — Hamilton.

"Knowledge hath two pillars, learning and discretion. The greatest scholar without his two eyes of discretion and honesty, is like blind Samson; apt to no good, able to much mischief."—T. Adams.

"To be wise too late is the exactest definition of a fool."—Young.

a "The clouds are, as in Job xxvi. 8, xxxviii. 37, conceived of as bags, which only in case they are suitably secured and do not burst, prevent the mighty outpouring of the upper waters upon the earth."-O. Zöckler.

b Ge. i. 9, 10; Ps. civ. 9.

"In nature all is managed for the best with the utmost frugality and just reserve, profuse to none but bountiful to all; never employing on one thing more than enough, but with exact economy retrenching the superfluous, and adding force to what is principal in everything." — Shaftesbury.

Who is wise "He that winneth," not riches, not honors, but "souls, is wise."

30, 31. (30) one brought up, or as directress of the work. "I was as His artificer."[c] R. V., "as a master workman." daily . . delight, comp. the Divine complacency in the daily works of creation, Ge. i. 4, 10, 12, 31. R. V., marg., "I had delight continually," i. e. "wisdom herself rejoiced in her power and her work." (31) habitable part, lit. in the world of His earth: i. e. in the whole of His creation, but with special reference to man as the crown of God's creation.[d] "When the inhabited earth appeared, she descended and abode upon it, mingling with men, and taking delight in counselling and guiding them." —Stuart.

The joy of Christ in the world (vs. 31).— Of all earthly creatures, Christ delights most in men. 1. Because man is the chief of God's creatures upon earth, made after God's image, and for whom all the rest were made. 2. Because He took on Him the nature of men, and not of angels (He. ii. 16). 3. He conversed most familiarly with men when He was incarnate. Men only had reason and wisdom to delight in Christ's company, and to give Him occasion to delight in theirs. 4. Because He gave His life for them, that they might live with Him forever. It seems, then, that He took great delight in them, and means to do so forever. — Francis Taylor.

c "This falls in best with the special point of the whole passage, the creative energy of wisdom."—Spk. Com.

d "Redemption is no afterthought in the Div. procedure. The world was built as its theatre, and Christ was foreordained before its foundation. Its redemption was contemplated by Him in eternity, and was then a source of joy." — Dav. Thomas.

Creation forever in progress.— How close does it bring the Creator to us to regard Him, not so much as having made the world, as still engaged in making it; i. e. by supplying the life on which its laws, and thus its being and incidents, depend. It is an ill-constructed theology which regards God as having created only in past ages. A gorgeous sunset, the leafing of a tree in the sweet spring-time, betokens the Divine hand no less palpably than did the miracles which provided the hungry multitudes of Galilee with food. Depend upon it (says an eloquent preacher), it is not the want of greater miracles, but of the soul to perceive such as are allowed us still, that makes us push all the sanctities into the far spaces we cannot reach. The devout feel that wherever God's hand is, there is miracle; and it is simply an undevoutness which imagines that only where miracle is, can there be the real hand of God. He who will but discern beneath the sun, as he rises any morning, the supporting finger of the Almighty, may recover the sweet and reverent surprise with which Adam gazed on the first dawn in Paradise; and if we cannot find Him there — if we cannot find Him on the margin of the sea, or in the flowers by the wayside — I do not think we should have discovered Him any more on the grass of Gethsemane or Olivet.— Grindon.

"If He loved, and rejoiced in them before they knew and loved Him, how will He love and rejoice in them, when He sees them surrounding His throne, perfectly resembling Himself, loving Him with unutterable love, contemplating Him with ineffable delight, and praising Him, as the author of all their everlasting glory and felicity."—Payson.

"Hell fire burns with rage, and meets with fuel fully prepared for it, when God dooms unto it a head full of light and a heart full of lust; those who know God's will but do it not, do but carry a torch with them to hell, to fire that pile which must for ever burn them" —Bp. Hopkins.

"How often has wisdom knocked at human hearts but to repay their hospitality!" — Young.

32, 33. (32) unto me, wisdom, now conceived as "wide as the universe, eternal as Jehovah, ordering all things; no longer merely as prudence, calculation, and human experience." — Spk. Com. blessed, etc., see Ps. cxix. 1, 2, cxxviii. 1. (33) refuse it not, from any disposition of self-will or pride.

Fearing Christ (vs. 32).— No sight so lovely as a religious youth. I. To harken to Christ is to hear His voice, which deserves to be heard; is a kind voice, an entreating voice, a pardoning voice, a comforting voice. II. To hearken to Christ is to believe His Gospel; Christ speaks in the Gospel, speaks to you, that He died for you to receive all the blessings made known in the Gospel. III. To hearken to Christ is to obey His laws. In this obedience of faith true blessedness is found.— Fletcher.

Wisdom our master. — O sweet courtesy! as if it were but a small matter that the Eternal Wisdom should become our Master, and teach us as His scholars; or that, being our Lord, He should teach us as His servants; or that, being God, He should teach us as men; yet greater is His love, and, as a Father, He teacheth us as His children. And well may He call us His children, for it is He that teacheth us who, by adoption, hath made us to be His children, which by hearkening unto Him we show ourselves to be.— Jermin.

"Yes, in place of this ancient Wisdom, which, stately and lovely as she is, remains always a little intangible and unapproachable, Christ is made unto us Wisdom, and He speaks to us the old words with a deeper meaning, and new words which none but He could ever speak." — Harper.

34—36. (34) watching, as eager students waiting for their teacher; as clients at a great man's portal. (35) life, the symbol of all good and blessing. obtain, R. V., marg. "drawforth." favour, or gracious acceptance. (36) sinneth against, better, misseth me. "He who takes a path that does not lead to wisdom, is guilty of moral suicide." wrongeth . . soul, "sin is folly, and the greatest sinner, whatever his talents and attainments may be, is the greatest fool." love death, or act as if they did.[a]

"Not watching awhile, and then going away if they be not let in presently, but waiting patiently till they be let in. Not only taking occasion of learning offered, but waiting to find occasions, as petitioners wait on great men till their causes be ended." — Francis Taylor.

The self-destroyer.— That is the subject,— that to do wrong is not only to do an injury to an unseen spirit, but to do a positive injury to the man guilty of that wrong himself. There is a plant, and I say to the sun, "I am not any longer going to be under obligation to you; I am going to keep this plant in the cellar," and I take down the plant that ought to be in the very middle of the garden, miles away from any shadow, and say to the sun, "I am going to do without you." Do I injure the sun? Not at all. What do I injure? The plant. The sun says, "I want to shine upon that plant, and to bring out of its juices all the beauty that is hidden there, and I would do so if you would allow me: whoso, plant of any kind, sins against me, or is made to sin against me, wrongs itself; does not wrong me, does not impair my shining. My light shall be as pure and lavish as ever, but the plant that is withdrawn from my shining shall die." And the sun blazes on, performing his circuit and accomplishing his appointed work. I say to Nature, "You have given me two arms; I am going to bind one of them to my side and never to use it. My purpose is to do as well as I can with one arm and one hand." What does Nature say? Nature says, "I meant you to use both arms; if you do not use both those limbs you will not injure me — Nature; you will set aside my purpose; you will destroy the limb." But cannot I bind my arm to my side and keep it there while I please, and allow it to hang there, and then let it grow as it may be able? "No," Nature says, "no." The everlasting ordinances of God, written on Sinai, written in the dust, written in the air, written everywhere, say "No." Whoso sinneth against physiological law wrongeth his own nature, his own flesh and blood, and he shall feel, in manifold penalty, in excruciating pain, in gradual and irresistible decay, that he has violated eternal law. That is the distinct teaching of the text. He that sinneth against wisdom, Christ, truth, light, purity, wrongeth his own soul, commits suicide, brings himself to an untimely death and a dishonored grave. — Parker.

[a] Pr. iv. 13, 22; vii. 27; Eze. xviii. 31.

CHAPTER THE NINTH.

1, 2. (1) builded her house,[a] where she may entertain all who seek her. seven pillars, seven, as usual, indicating completeness, perfection.[b] Pillars, as the emblem of strength. Roofs were usually, in ancient times, supported by pillars. (2) killed, etc., lit. killed her killing. Flesh was a part of the provision at Eastern banquets. mingled her wine, with water or milk to dilute it and preserve temperance. Some, however, think that allusion is here made to the custom of adding myrrh and other spices to wine to increase its flavor.

Wisdom's feast (vss. 1–6).— 1. It is plain that the human spirit needs a feast from the fact that God has spread the board. Man's spiritual nature must starve without the feast which God's wisdom has prepared. The existence of the feast proves the existence of the need. 2. This feast is of the best quality. The man who prepares a feast for his guests prepares of his best. Christ, who declares Himself to be meat and drink to the spirit of man is the best gift that God had to bestow upon man — the best food that heaven could furnish. 3. Wisdom's feast is one in which there is variety. The human spirit, like the human body, craves a variety in its food, and God has satisfied that craving. The revelation of God in Christ (in other words, the gospel) reveals a great variety of spiritual truths upon which the spiritual nature of man can feed.— Preacher's Com.

Wisdom's feast. — All the details as to the feast of Wisdom would seem to be but so many anticipations of the parables and appeals of Jesus Christ. The idea of "building her house" runs through the Christian writings. "Upon this rock I will build my church;" "Built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets;" "Built up a spiritual house." We may speak of the house of Wisdom as we speak of the house of God. It is a sanctuary, a home, a centre of union, a bond and symbol of friendship. The invitation of Wisdom is the invitation of Christ: "Behold, I have prepared my dinner: my oxen and my fatlings are killed, and all things are ready: come unto the marriage." All we have to do is to go; we take with us nothing but our hunger; the feast is Christ's, the invitation is Christ's, the house is Christ's; the hunger alone is ours, and a blessed hunger it is if we feel that only Christ can satisfy it. Wisdom mingles the wine and flavors it with choice spices, and sends forth invitations rich with the music of hospitality: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price," — come and do what otherwise would be impossible; claim as a right what is given as a grace, and treat as a purchase what is bestowed as a gift. — Parker.

3, 4. (3) maidens, servants; the female word may be chosen bec. wisdom is represented as a queen, or bec. "females were the accustomed heralds of good news among the Hebrews."— Stuart. highest places, conspicuous places. (4) simple, imprudent and inexperienced, hence easily led astray.[c]

Wisdom's banquet; or, the call to salvation. — 1. The New Testament echoes the Old, and the Gospel is essentially the same in every way; 2. The Gospel of Christ is the unfolding, expansion, enrichment of the ancient spiritual lore; 3. The relation of the Divine to the human remains constant; it is that of supply to want, knowledge to ignorance, love and light to sorrow and darkness; 4. The invitation to the kingdom of heaven is free and general, conditioned by nothing except the need of its blessings. — Pul. Com.

Wisdom's invitation. — This may derive some illustration from a custom which Hasselquist noticed in Egypt, and which may seem to be ancient in that country. That it has been scarcely noticed by other travelers may arise from the fact that, although they may have seen the maidens on their way, they had not the means of knowing on what errand they were bound. He a Note the similarities bet. this parable and some of those given by our Lord, e. g. The Great Supper, the Wedding Feast.

"The special idea conveyed is that of a treasure piled up for many years, ancient wealth." — Spk. Com.

"Wisdom is oft-times nearer when we stoop, than when we soar." — Wordsworth.

b "Wisdom builded her house and erected seven pillars, wh. number designates the unity of the churches, inasmuch as seven expresses universality."— St. Augustine.

"The church is here called the house of Wisdom, who is said to have hewn out seven pillars, bec. they are supported by the strength of Him who is perfect, and bec. seven is the number of perfection." — St. Gregory.

Comp. Jas. iii. 17; Re. i 4, 12.

"All that is strong and lasting in the world has taken time in its formation. So is it in the refuge where that is found which will satisfy the soul of man. It was long ere it was completed, but it is a lasting edifice, built upon a sure foundation."— Preacher's Com.

c Plato had inscribed on the door of his school, "Let none but geometricians enter here;" but on the portals of the Christian school is written, "Whoso is simple, let him turn in hither."

"The maidens are sent forth — not one, but many — that the message may go to all quarters. They cry in the highest places of the city, that the message may have the greatest publicity, may spread over the widest area, may reach all classes. This is the character of the call of God to us in His truth. He seeks us before we seek Him."—Pul. Com.

says that he saw a great number of women, who went about inviting people to a banquet in a singular, and, without doubt, in a very ancient manner. They were about ten or twelve, covered with black veils, as is customary in that country. They were preceded by four eunuchs; after them, and on the side, were Moors, with their usual walking staves. As they were walking, they all joined in making a noise, which, he was told, signified their joy, but which he could not find resembled a joyful or pleasing sound. — Kitto.

5, 6. (5) bread . . wine, i. e. all needful nourishment. (6) foolish,[a] R. V., "Leave off, ye simple ones." Stuart, "Forsake simplicity." and live, i. e. enjoy a long and happy life. go, not enough to leave off, the simple one must make progress towards knowl.

The morality of trade. — A carpenter, who was tired of making an honest living, came to a gentleman in Philadelphia with a petition for a tavern license, which he requested him to sign. The gentleman looked at him, and asked him why he did not stick to his plane and bench. The answer was, "Tavern-keeping is a more lucrative trade; I want to get richer." "Well, but do you not think you will be affording additional facilities to drunkards to destroy themselves?" "Perhaps I shall." "Do you not believe that at least five men every year will die drunkards if you succeed in getting a license?" "Why, I never thought of that before; but I suppose it would be so." "Then, if the Lord lets you keep tavern for ten years, fifty men will have died through your agency; now, what becomes of the drunkard? Does he go to heaven?" "I suppose not." "I am sure he does not, for no drunkard shall inherit the kingdom of heaven. What becomes of him, then?" "Why, he must go to hell." "Well, do you not think it will be just if the Lord, at the end of ten years, sends you down to hell too, to look after those fifty drunkards?" The man threw down his petition, went back to his honest occupation, and was never tempted to desire a license again. — Whitecross.

7, 8. (7) reproveth a scorner, comp. Mat. vii. 1–5. a blot, such a proceeding results in disgrace to himself. This is not said to discourage the virtuous from reproving transgressors, but states the effect which experience proves to occur in such cases. Prudence, caution, and tact are needed in dealing with these characters. Evil men regard the reprover as a personal enemy, and treat him with contumely. — Pul. Com. (8) hate thee, for pointing to his wilful ways, and spoiling his pleasure in walking in them. love thee, Ps. cxli. 5.

Reproof (vss. 7–9). — The text leads us to consider reproof in two aspects. I. As injuriously administered. II. As usefully administered. 1. By rebuking a wise man you enlist his affection; 2. By instructing a wise man you render him a benefit. — Thomas.

Reproof. — There is a time to speak, using the language of strong and even severe reproach. On the other hand — this is the truth of the text — there is a time to be silent, to leave abandoned and guilty men to be condemned of God. Reproach would be lost upon them; it would only come back with a severe rebound, and wound the speaker. The practical point, then, is that we consider the character of a man before attempting to rebuke him, and that we be not so anxious to protest against sin as to counsel the sinner and guide him to better ways. — Pul. Com.—A reproof. — The Rev. John Maclaurin, of Glasgow, well known to the world by his valuable Christian writings, in passing one day along the street, was disturbed by the noise of some disorderly soldiers. One of them particularly, just as Mr. Maclaurin approached them, uttered an awful imprecation. The good man, shocked with hearing such blasphemous language, went up to him, and laying his hand on the shoulder of the man, spoke to him with peculiar mildness and solemnity. It was a word in season, and it came with power. The conscience of the soldier sunk under the reproof. He was led not only to reform the evil habit of swearing, to which he had long been addicted, but to reflect on his ways, and to turn to the Lord. He became a real Christian; and proved the soundness of his conversion by maintaining to the end of his life a conversation becoming the Gospel. — Whitecross.

9. yet wiser, bec. he will wisely use the instructions. just,[b] wisdom being a moral and not merely an intellectual, quality, there is a natural interchange of "wise" and "just," referring to the same individual, in the two clauses.

a "No coming to this feast in the tattered rags of the old Adam: you must relinquish your former evil courses and companies."—Trapp.

"Wonderful! 'No,' we may answer in the terms of the negro woman to the missionary when he put the question, 'Is not this wonderful?' 'No, massa, it be just like Him.' It is in the true style of infinite benevolence." — Preachers' Com.

"Wisdom consists in the choice of the best ends, and the use of the most appropriate means to accomplish those ends." —R. Watson.

"Seldom ever was any knowledge given to keep, but to impart: the grace of this rich jewel is lost in concealment." — Bishop Hall.

b "The more a wise man learns the more he loves wisdom." — Fausset.

A powerful sermon. — It is related of Dr. Manton, that having to preach before the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, he chose a subject in which he had an opportunity of displaying his learning and judgment. He was heard with admiration and applause by the intelligent part of his audience; but as he was returning from dinner with the Lord Mayor, a poor man following him pulled him by the sleeve of his gown, and asked him if he was the gentleman that preached before the Lord Mayor. He replied he was. "Sir," said he, "I came with hopes of getting some good to my soul, but I was greatly disappointed, for I could not understand a great deal of what you said: you were quite above my comprehension." "Friend," said the doctor, "if I have not given you a sermon, you have given me one. By the grace of God, I will not play the fool in such a manner again." — R. T. S.

10, 11. (10) fear, etc., ch. i, 7; Eccl. xii. 13. of the holy R. V., "the Holy One," a plural epithet in apposition with Jehovah.[a] (11) days, etc., ch. iii. 16; x. 27.

Character (vss. 10–12.) — Nothing so important to man as character. Here we have — I. The foundation and blessedness of a good character. 1. The foundation; 2. The blessedness. II. The solemn personality of character, whether good or bad. — Thomas.

A remarkable character. — During the session of Congress, Mr. Jefferson pointed out Roger Sherman to a friend, saying, "That is Mr. Sherman, of Connecticut, a man who never said a foolish thing in his life." Mr. Macon said of him, "He had more common sense than any man I ever knew." Fisher Ames said, "If I am absent during a discussion of a subject, and consequently know not on which side to vote, I always look at Roger Sherman; for I am sure if I vote with him, I shall vote right." He was a pious man, faithful in his closet, in his family, on the bench, and in the senate house. Such character is valuable as it is rare.

12. Wise for thyself, wisdom will bring its own reward, as also will folly.[b] "This verse asserts the great law of personal retribution. Whatever thou doest, thou, and none other, shall reap the fruits of it." — Spk. Com.

Carving character. — Did you ever watch a sculptor slowly fashioning a human countenance? It is not molded at once. It is not struck out at a single blow. It is painfully and laboriously wrought. A thousand blows rough-cast it. Ten thousand chisels polish and perfect it, put in the fine touches, and bring out the features and expression. It is a work of time; but at last the full likeness comes out, and stands fixed and unchanging in the solid marble. So does a man carve out his own moral likeness. Every day he adds something to the work. A thousand acts of thought and will and effort shape the features and expressions of the soul. Habits of love, piety, and truth, habits of falsehood, passion or goodness, silently mould and fashion it, till at length it wears the likeness of God, or the image of a demon. — Oxenden.

18—15. (13) foolish woman, R. V., marg. "Folly;" represented under the guise of an adulteress; representing the sensuous, self-indulgent life. Comp. ch. vii. simple, in the bad sense; no moral fibre with wh. to resist temptation. knoweth nothing, and careth to know nothing. Self-indulgence ruins intelligence, and plucks away all care for wisdom. (14) door of her house, "she like Wisdom has a house of her own, and imitates her in inviting guests to enter." high places, or conspicuous places; challenging attention, she seeks to rival Wisdom in gaining followers. (15) go right on, if so be she may induce them to turn aside from duty to indulgence.

The ministry of temptation (vss. 13–18).—I. As conducted by depraved woman. 1. She is ignorant; 2. She is clamorous; 3. She is audacious; 4. She is persuasive. II. As directed to the inexperienced in life. 1. All men are passengers; 2. Temptation is busy in the path of each. III. As tending to a most miserable destination. 1. This woman obtaineth guests; 2. They are ruined; 3. Ruined contrary to their intention. — Thomas.

The voice of woman. — There is one part of woman's education often forgotten or neglected — the culture and formation of a gentle voice. It is a great gift of nature to be aided by culture — an instrument of powerful influence for good. I speak not of singing hymns now, and of culture for harmony and musical purposes, though these tend to God's praise, or to give a "The knowledge of the holy, in whatsoever of God or creature, it may have an example or be made to appear." —J. Miller.

"Wisdom's self oft seeks to sweet retired solitude; where, with her best nurse, Contemplation, she plumes her feathers, and lets grow her wings, that in the various bustle of resort were all too ruffled, and sometimes impair'd."—Milton.

"The 'knowledge of the holy" is the knowledge of all that is involved in hallowing God's name; knowing experimentally all that tends to our sanctifying the Lord in our hearts and in life." — Fausett.

b Comp. Job xxii. 2, 3; xxxv. 6-9; Re. xii. 11, 12.

"Every man has in himself a continent of undiscovered character. Happy is he who acts the Columbus to his own soul."— Sir J. Stevens.

"Some of the true wisdom is a nucleus round which more will gather. A little island once formed in the bed of a great river, tends continually to increase. Such is wisdom from above once settled in a soul. It makes all things work together for good to its possessor." —Arnot.

"'Tis thine to curb the passions' madd'ning sway, and wipe the mourner's bitter tear away; 't is thine to soothe, when hope itself has fled, and cheer with angel smile the sufferer's bed; to give to earth its charm, to life its zest, one only task —to bless, and to be blest." — Graham.

"'Clamorous,' that is, so bustling as to allow no time for repentance (see 5, 6), like Cardinal Mazarin, of whom it was said that the devil would never let him rest."—Preacher's Com. a Ro. vii. 7; Pr. vi. 15.

"A proverb, meaning that forbidden delights are sweet and pleasant, as fruits of risk and danger."—Fausset. Comp. Pr. ii. 18, 19; vii. 27.

"Even the highway of God, though a path of safety, is beset with temptation. Satan is so angry with none as with those who are going right on."—Bridges.

"It is a great mistake to suppose that a woman with no heart will be an easy creditor in the exchange of affection. There is not on earth a more merciless exacter of love from others than a thoroughly selfish woman; and the more unlovely she grows, the more jealously and scrupulously she exacts love to the utmost farthing."—Mrs. Stowe.

From the beginning of the 10th chap to the 16th vs. of the 22d chap. we have the first great collection of Solomonic proverbs.

"What if God should place in your hand a diamond, and tell you to inscribe on it a sentence, which should be read at the last day, and shown there as an index of your own thoughts and feelings! Now, this is what God has done. He has placed before you the immortal minds of your children, more imperishable than the diamond on which you are about to inscribe every day innocent amusement; but this gentle voice will be able to guide and persuade to good the manly heart of a faithful husband, will mitigate sorrow, lessen trial, and speak of hope and joy to her dearest friends and connections, in accents at once powerful and pleasing. Let us then be careful in our schools to cultivate this most valuable acquirement. How different, in all respects, for a family, for friends and neighbors, are the kind, gentle, persuasive accents I have described from sounds we sometimes (alas! too often) hear in the close abodes of poverty and trial—high, harsh, female treble tones of bitter import, scolding and reproaching, and driving away from the hearth and home (perhaps to sorrow and to sin) the husband and the children.—Slaney.

16—18. (16) simple, etc., obs. the foolish woman's imitation of the call of wisdom, vs. 4. (17) stolen waters, etc., illicit pleasures are attractive bec. they are forbidden.[a] (18) depths of hell, sheol. "Behind the scene of voluptuousness is seen the world of the dead. The spectres of past transgressions haunt it."—Spk. Com.

The pleasures of prohibited sin (vs. 17).—This argues not only a bold contempt but an impudent defiance—I. Of God's law—in that the waters are sweeter for being stolen. II. Of God's curse. The bread is eaten in secret for fear of discovery and punishment; and the sinner takes a pride in having so far baffled his convictions and triumphed over them, that, notwithstanding that fear, he dares commit sin, and can make himself believe that being eaten in secret it shall never be discovered or reckoned, for sweetness and pleasantness is the bait; but by the tempter's own showing, even that is so absurd, and hath such alloys, that it is a wonder how it can have any influence upon men that pretend to reason.—Henry.

Queen's influence on the female character of Britain.—The unsullied purity of Her Majesty's private life, and the noble example she afforded to the women of Great Britain, was attended with an effect, the benefit of which was deeply felt through the whole of her reign, and may, as we trust it will, extend to ages yet unborn, since upon the conduct of the female sex mainly rests the edifice of the public as well as private morals. No woman, however elevated her rank or powerful her connections, if her reputation was known to have suffered the slightest taint, was permitted to appear in the presence of Her Majesty. Her fine reply to Lady ———, when soliciting permission to present Lady ———, and, when refused, saying she did not know what to tell her disappointed friend, will long be remembered and repeated: "Tell her," said the queen, "you did not dare to ask me."—Percy Anec.

CHAPTER THE TENTH.

1. proverbs, or collection of maxims; without any necessary connection. The two sentences composing one verse are often antithetical. wise son, one who is godly, ready to receive parental guidance, and the higher instructions of Divine Wisdom. foolish son, one who is willful, only seeking sensuous indulgences. mother, mentioned with no special purpose, only to vary the sentence from the previous one.

The child and the parent (vs. 1).—I. The holy character of the child gladdens the heart of the parent—1. Because he sees in such conduct the best results of his training; 2. And the best guarantees for his son's happiness. II. The unholy character of the child saddens the heart of the parent.—Thomas.

Reproofs from Dr. Waugh.—At one of the half-yearly examinations at the Protestant Dissenters' Grammar School, at Mill Hill, the head master informed the examiners that he had been exceedingly tried by the misconduct and perverseness of a boy who had done something very wrong; and who, though he acknowledged the fact, could not be brought to acknowledge the magnitude of the offense. The examiners were requested to expostulate with the boy, and try if he could be brought to feel and deplore it. Dr. Waugh was solicited to undertake the task, and the boy was, in consequence, brought before him. "How long have you been in the school, my boy?" asked the doctor. "Four months, sir." "When did you hear from your father last?" "My father's dead, sir." "Ay! alas the day! 'tis a great loss, a great loss, that of a father. But God can make it up to you, by giving you a tender, affectionate mother." On this the boy, who had previously seemed as hard as a flint, began to soften. The doctor proceeded: "Well, laddie, where is your mother?" "On her voyage home from India, sir." "Ay! good news for you, my boy: do you love your mother?" "Yes, sir." "And do you expect to see her soon?" "Yes, sir." "Do you think she loves you?" "Yes, sir, I am sure of it." "Then think, my dear laddie, think of her feelings when she comes here and finds that, instead of you being in favor with every one, you are in such deep disgrace as to run the risk of expulsion, and yet are too hardened to acknowledge that you have done wrong. Winna ye break your poor mother's heart, think ye? Just think o' that, my lad." The poor culprit burst into a flood of tears, acknowledged his fault, and promised amendment.

and every hour, by your instructions, by your spirit, or by your example, something which will remain, and be exhibited for or against you at the judgment day."—Payson.

2. Treasures of wickedness, ill-gotten gains, see ch. xi. 4; comp. between the relative values of wealth and of character. righteousness, including generally good character, and specifically benevolence. death, the real sting of wh. is the sense of sin.[a]

Rectitude.—Righteousness before God is essential to all prosperity—1. Because, if we deliberately choose the path of iniquity, we shall have to work against the arm of Omnipotence. "He casteth away the substance of the wicked." 2. Because, on the contrary, if we walk in moral and spiritual integrity, we may count on the direction and even the interposition of the Divine hand. 3. Because righteousness means virtue and prudence; it means those qualities which work for health and for security, which "relieve from death." 4. Because the gains of ungodliness are never satisfactory; they profit nothing. — Pul. Com.

David Hume.—Hume, the historian, received a religious education from his mother, and early in life was the subject of strong and hopeful religious impressions; but as he approached manhood they were effaced, and confirmed infidelity succeeded. Maternal partiality, however alarmed at first, came at length to look with less and less pain upon his declension, and filial love and reverence seemed to have been absorbed in the pride of philosophical scepticism; for Hume applied himself with unwearied, and, unhappily, with successful efforts, to sap the foundation of his mother's faith. Having succeeded in this dreadful work, he went abroad, and as he was returning, an express met him in London, with a letter from his mother, informing him that she was in a deep decline, and could not long survive: she said, she found herself without any support in her distress; that he had taken away that only source of comfort upon which, in all cases of affliction, she used to rely; and that she now found her mind sinking into despair. She did not doubt that her son would afford her some substitute for her religion; and she conjured him to hasten to her, or at least to send her a letter, containing such consolation as philosophy could afford to a dying mortal. Hume was overwhelmed with anguish on receiving this letter, and hastened to Scotland, traveling day and night; but before he arrived his mother expired. No permanent impression seems, however, to have been made on his mind by this trying event; and, whatever remorse he might have felt at the moment, he soon relapsed into his previous hardness of heart. Thus it is that false philosophy restores the sting to death, and gives again the victory to the grave. — R. T. S.

a "The highest opulence of the dead sinner is of no possible profit; but the righteousness of the saved sinner, even without any opulence at all, is a fortune; for, like the 'charm of the lamp,' it makes for him everlasting blessedness."—J. Miller.

"None thrive so well as those that stay God's leisure, and expect wealth in His way."

"Aristotle tells us of the sea-mew, or sea-eagle, that she will often seize on her prey, though it be more than she can bear, and falleth down headlong with it into the deep, and so perisheth. This fowl is a fit emblem of the unrighteous person, for he graspeth those heavy possessions which press him down into the pit of perdition."—Preacher's Com.

3, 4. (3) soul, put for life: comp. Ps. xxxvii. 25. casteth, etc., better read, "He will repel the greedy desires of the wicked." The godly man may be sure of not wanting "any good thing;" but the cravings of the wicked are frustrated. (4) slack hand, careless, idle. The hand of one who does not feel the burden and responsibility of life.[b] diligent, lit. sharpened.[c]

Industry and contentment.—A noble instance of contentment is given in the life of the late William Roscoe, Esq. That gifted man was almost entirely self-taught, and indebted to his own efforts for his rise from a very humble station. In an account of his early days, written by himself, he says: "Having quitted school at twelve years old, I now began to assist my father in his agricultural concerns. In this and other laborious occupations, particularly in the care of a garden, in which I took great pleasure, I passed several years of my life, devoting my hours of relaxation to reading my books. This mode of life gave health and vigor to my body, and amusement and instruction to my mind; and to this day I well remember the delicious sleep which succeeded my labors, from which I was again called at an early hour. If I were asked whom I considered to be the happiest of the human race, I would b The word used lit means deceitful, in the sense of failing of its purpose.

c Pr. xii. 24.

"The Lord's visits of favor were never given to loiterers. Moses and the shepherds of Bethlehem were keeping their flocks. Gideon was at the threshing-floor. 'Our idle days,' as Bishop Hall observes, 'are Satan's busy days.' Active employment gives us a ready answer to his present temptation. 'I am doing a great work, and I cannot come down.'"—Bridges.

"It would be a libel upon the Divine economy to imagine that the tender plant of grace would thrive in a sluggard's garden. The work is difficult. The times are bad. He who would gain in godliness must put his soul into the business. But he who puts his soul into the business will grow rich. Labor laid out here is not lost. Those who strive lawfully will win a kingdom. When all counts are closed, he who is rich in faith is the richest man"—Arnot.

"Compare thyself with those that are more learned or wise than thyself, and then thou will see matter to keep thee humble."—Sir M. Hale.

answer, those who cultivate the earth by their own hands." — Advantages of industry. — The blessing of God doth so follow it, that more have been made honorable by their diligence than by their birth. From servants many have grown to be masters, from hirelings to be officers, through their diligence — as we see in Jacob, Joseph, David, with many more. Witness also the Romans, who raised their commonwealth thereby, and stood not upon terms of blood; some of them were fetched from the plough; some from other places mean and base. Cicero, Fabius, Quintius, and others, witness these things. Justinius, of a diligent herdboy became a diligent soldier; of a diligent soldier, a great commander: of a commander, the emperor of the world, and one of the best. And if we should come nearer home, how many judges and bishops of this land, of mean descent, have risen to honor by it! . . . Oh, then, let us fall in love with diligence! Which way can we cast our eyes and want arguments? Look up to heaven, and without diligence no getting thither; for that crown we must run and strive and work. Look upon the earth, and without diligence no blessing can be hoped for from it. God speed the plough! let the land miss his tillage, and where is the increase? but the oftener it is turned, compassed, and ploughed, the surer it proves to the husbandman's content. We read in story of one Furius Cresinus, a Roman, who was accused of witchcraft in drawing away the fat of other men's land into his own, for that every year he had great crops, and his neighbors small or none; this they thought came by enchantment, and thereof he was questioned in judgment. The poor man brings with him all his tools of husbandry — heavy mattocks, weighty ploughshares, full-fed oxen, all his irons much bigger and stronger than his neighbors, and, lastly, his daughter, a strong and big maid, who was his helper in his business, and setting all these before his judges and accusers, cried out in these words, "Hæc sunt, Quirites, beneficia mea!" "This daughter, these oxen, these tools, are the instruments of my witchcraft, and besides these I use none, and these with diligence I apply." It is good ground, a good husbandman, and God's blessing, that bring good crops, whether for soul or body. — Arrowsmith.

"Every day is a little life, and our whole life is but a day repeated. Those, therefore, that dare lose a day are dangerously prodigal; those that dare misspend it, desperate." — Bishop Hall.

"Aspire, break bounds! I say;
Endeavor to be good, and better still,
And best! Success is naught, endeavor's all."—
Robert Browning.

5. gathereth, the ripened harvest into threshing-floor or barn. son, or man. Son may be especially used bec. these proverbs and counsels are addressed to the young. The wise son watches for opportunities, and does the work of the season. sleepeth, in mere listless idleness, or for mere enjoyment.[a] "Life is a short day, but it is a working day."

The day of grace (vs. 5). — It is — I. A short time, and therefore calls for diligence. The King's business requires haste. II. A limited time, beyond which there is no mercy, Eccles. ix. 10; Luke xiii. 9. III. A varying time, as summer days are longer than winter days, and there are sunny days and cloudy days; but the rainbow of God's mercy is seen only in the day of grace. We should look for it in vain in the night of eternal darkness. — S. C. Bowes.

Lingering. — There was a king of Sicily who was called "The Lingerer," not because he stayed till opportunity came, but because he stayed till opportunity was lost. There is a time to wait, and there is a time to act. Overlong waiting means loss of chance, for the king has passed by and the gates are closed; but to wait patiently until everything is ripe for action is the very last expression of Christian culture. "He that believeth shall not make haste;" he who only half believeth shall live in fretfulness and anxiety, shall always be clutching at prizes and never seizing them. — Exp. Bib. — Harvest. — When God opens a gate he means that we should go through it, and pass into all the inheritance beyond; when God sends autumn upon the earth, with all its golden wheat fields and purple vintages, it is that men may arise and gather in the fruits of the earth, so that when winter comes there may be a garden within the walls of the house, yea, an abundant store on the hearthstone. — Parker.

6, 7. (6) Blessings, praises and thanks. Benedictions. violence, etc., may be read, "The mouth of the wicked covereth, or concealeth violence."[b] "The wicked conceal or keep secret a meditated injury that they may strike the surer blow." — Stuart. (7) is blessed, for a blessing, as an excellent and inspiring example; whenever he is remembered a blessing shall be invoked upon him. rot, be worm-eaten, useless, loathsome. He can only be used to point a warning.[c]

The memory of the just (vs. 7). — "The memory of the just is blessed (1)

"Aspire, break bounds! I say;
Endeavor to be good, and better still,
And best! Success is naught, endeavor's all."—
Robert Browning.

[a] "To sleep when the plenteous harvest lies ready for the sickle is the extremest sloth." Spk. Com.

[b] "The violence wh. the wicked has done is as a bandage over his mouth, reducing him to a silence and shame like that of the leper or the condemned criminal, whose 'face is covered.'" —Spk. Com.

[c] Ps. ix. 5, 6.

because of his winning friendship; (2) because of his unfeigned piety; (3) because of his steadfast patience; (4) because of his noble, public-spirited activity." — Ziegler.

The power of kindness.—Fénélon was a Roman Catholic, and Archbishop of Cambray, in France. He was a man of the finest feelings, of the greatest benevolence, and he uniformly practiced the law, "overcome evil with good." He was kind and affable to the lowly, mild and courteous to the ignorant, philanthropic to the miserable, and ever gentle both to friend and foe. The consequence was that he won all hearts. His diocese was often the theatre of war; but the English, Germans and Dutch even surpassed the inhabitants of Cambray in their love and veneration for him. At such times he gathered the wretched into his residence and entertained them; for his known goodness had surrounded him with a power which even contending armies could not resist; and the consequence was that his dwellings were safe, even when towns and villages were lying in smoking ruins around him. The following is an instance of his great kindness: He observed one day that a peasant, who had been driven from his home, and to whom Fénélon had given shelter, ate nothing. He inquired the reason. "Alas! my lord," said the poor man, "in making my escape from my cottage I had not time to bring off my cow, which was the support of my family. The enemy will drive her away, and I shall never find another so good." Fénélon, availing himself of his privilege of safe conduct, immediately set out, accompanied by a single servant, and drove her back himself to the peasant. By thus walking according to the law of overcoming evil with good, he gained the affection of all. The peasantry loved him as their father; and, long after his death, their tears would flow when they said, "There is the chair on which our good archbishop used to sit in the midst of us; we shall see him no more." What a crown of unfading glory the law of love gave him! — Montgomery.

"Just memories are flowers we cannot allow to fade; we water them with our tears; by them we enrich and ennoble our prayers, and by them we animate ourself as by a sacred stimulus. —T. Parker.

"One man has kindness deep within him; and when the occasion comes the rind or shell is cracked, and the kernel is found. Such a man's heart, too long clouded, like a sun in a storm-muffled day, shoots through some opening rift, and glows for a period in glory. But there are other natures that are always cloudless; with them a cloud is the exception, shining is the rule."—Beecher.

8—10. (8) receive, etc., be willing to submit to rules. prating fool, lit. fool of lips, a braggart. shall fall, be brought to a humiliating downfall; or shall be beaten. (9) walketh surely, or securely, safely. perverteth, acteth deceitfully. known, found out and punished.[a] (10) winketh, ch. vi. 13. "In craft and malice behind a man's back." — Wordsworth. prating fool, i. e. "the garrulous fool is even more certain to bring ruin on himself and others than the crafty plotter." — Pul. Com.

The upright (vs. 9).—I. Observe a few paradoxes. 1. He who walks uprightly is he who leans upon God; 2. Who bears his own burden; 3. Who ever bows before God; 4. Who waits for God; 5. Who runs in the way of God's commandments. II. Call to mind a few truisms. 1. He never walks alone; 2. He is always safe; 3. He is comparatively free from alarm; 4. He is never neglected; 5. He is not disappointed at last. III. A few questions. 1. Is your heart changed? 2. Do you avoid all known sin? 3. Do you seek the approval of God? 4. Do you continually endeavor to do the right?—Stems and Twigs.

Underhandedness.—Have no part with men who give themselves up to tricks, to evil counsels, to the working of disappointment in the hearts of others; only believe the man whose voice is clear, simple, and direct; about whose words there is no moral mystery, whose word is his bond, whose words indeed may be few but not therefore unwise; the man who means what he says, and who having sworn to his hurt will still carry out his covenant. The man who can submit to a mean trick will certainly not shrink from carrying it out in its fullness when opportunity serves. To wink with the eye may seem to be innocent enough, and so it may be under some circumstances, but when it is an indication of moral depravity, when it indicates knavery, trickery, deceit, the issue thereof must be sorrow of the bitterest quality.—T. Parker.

[a] "He adopts crooked ways in order, as he thinks, to be able to practice iniquity more secure and unobserved; but he is ever known and exposed, he must himself always fear recognition, and this gives to his walk' 'insecurity." — Rucetschi, thro' Lange.

"It is striking how often Solomon dwells upon sins of the tongue; no member is so hard to control; none more surely indicates the man."—Fausset.

"Such as thy words are such will thy affections be esteemed; and such will thy deeds as thy affections, and such thy life as thy deeds." — Socrates

11. well of life, or fresh flowing spring, ever pouring forth healing, helpful words, Jer. ii. 13; xvii. 13; Pro. iv. 10. violence, etc., see vs. 6.

The speech of the good (vs. 11). — Speech is one of the most distinguishing faculties of man: here that a good man is compared to a well of life. I. It is natural. II. Clean. III. Refreshing. IV. Life-giving. — Thomas.

The good man. — In a hot summer's day I was sailing with a friend in a tiny boat on a miniature lake, enclosed like a cup within a circle of steep, bare Scottish hills. On the shoulders of the brown, sun-burnt mountain, and full in sight, was a well, with a crystal stream trickling over its lip, and making its way down towards the lake. Around the well's mouth, and along the course of the rivulet, a belt of green stood out in strong contrast with the iron surface of the rock all around. "What do you make of that?" said my friend, who had both an open eye to read the book of Nature and a heart all aglow with its lessons of love. We soon agreed as to what should be made of it. It did not need us to make it into anything. There it was, a legend clearly printed by the finger of God on the side of these silent hills, teaching the passer-by how needful a good man is, and how useful he may be in a desert world. . . . . The Lord looks down, and men look up, expecting to see a fringe of living green around the lip of a Christian's life-course. — Arnot.

"Great men's words, saith one, are like dead men's shoes; he may go barefoot that waiteth for them." — J. Trapp.

"Kind looks, kind words, kind acts, and warm handshakes – these are secondary means of grace when men are in trouble, and are fighting their unseen battles."—J. Hall.

12. hatred . . strifes, litigations, disputes, either family or social. love, one element of wh. is the Pauline charity, wh. "beareth all things, and seeketh not her own."[a] covereth,[b] "by ignoring them, by palliating words, by considerate and conciliatory demeanor." — Zöckler.

Hatred and love (vs. 12). — Here we have — I. The great mischief-maker — hatred. Consider the strifes it causes in nations, communities, families. II. The great peace-maker — love. It is an element; its home is the heart of God — the God of peace. It is an agent; its grand messenger is Christ — the Prince of peace. 1. It restores order; 2. It pardons offenses. — Thomas.

a 1 Cor. xiii.

b "Love hath a large mantle." — Trapp.

Pr. xvii. 9; Jas. v. 20; 1 Pe. iv. 8; 1 Cor. xiii. 4.

"It is in the nature of love not only to forgive an injury, but to forget that the injury has ever been done."

"When you speak to any, especially of quality, look them full in the face, other gestures betraying want of breeding, confidence, or honesty; dejected eye confessing, to most judgments, guilt or folly."—F. Osborn.

"In the use of the tongue God hath distinguished us from beasts, and by the well or ill using it we are distinguished from one another; and, therefore, though silence be innocent as death, harmless as a rose's breath to a distant passenger, yet it is rather the state of death than life."—Jeremy Taylor.

"No Christian can yield to the spirit of hatred. When he feels that that spirit is getting the upper hand of him he betakes himself to secret intercourse with God and fights the awful battle at the Cross."—Parker.

"He that is graceless in a day of grace will be speechless in a day of judgment." — Mead.

Speaking gently. —

Speak gently! It is better far
To rule by love than fear;
Speak gently — let no harsh words mar
The good we might do here!

Speak gently! Love doth whisper low
The vows that true hearts bind;
And gently Friendship's accents flow —
Affection's voice is kind.

Speak gently to the little child!
Its love be sure to gain;
Teach it in accents soft and mild:
It may not long remain.

Speak gently to the young, for they
Will have enough to bear —
Pass through this life as best they may,
'Tis full of anxious care!

Speak gently to the aged one,
Grieve not the careworn heart;
The sands of life are nearly run —
Let each in peace depart!

Speak gently, kindly, to the poor;
Let no harsh tone be heard;
They have enough they must endure,
Without an unkind word!

Speak gently to the erring: know,
They may have toil'd in vain;
Perchance unkindness made them so;
Oh, win them back again!

Speak gently! He who gave His life
To bend man's stubborn will,
When elements were in fierce strife,
Said to them, "Peace, be still!"

Speak gently! 'Tis a little thing
Dropp'd in the heart's deep well.
The good, the joy, which it may bring,
Eternity shall tell.— Bates.

13, 14. (13) lips, or spoken words. rod, etc., punishment like that wh. comes to the idle and foolish schoolboy.[a] void, etc., wh. is surely seen by his foolish talk. (14) lay up, store it in memory and in heart. near destruction, R. V., "a present destruction;" i. e. the careless talk of the foolish brings them into trouble.[b]

Conscience and the rod. — An old writer says, "The guilty conscience conceives every thistle to be a tree, every tree a man, every man a devil, — afraid of every man that it sees, nay, many times of those that it sees not. Not much unlike to one that was very deep in debt and had many creditors, who, as he walked London streets in the evening, a tender-hook caught his cloak. 'At whose suit?' said he, conceiving some sergeant had arrested him. Thus the ill-conscienced man counts every creature he meets with a bailiff sent from God to punish him." Such a conscience is indeed a "rod for the fool's back." — Preacher's Com.

15. wealth . . city,[c] "wealth is a help in many ways, securing from dangers, giving time and opportunity for acquiring wisdom, making one independent and free in action (Eccles. vii. 12)." destruction . . poverty, the poor are crushed, exposed to all kinds of evil, moral and material, by their want of means. But all this is of course to be qualified. The simply meaning is: "There are times when the wealth of the rich will avert danger and suffering; and at such a time the poor may perish for want of money. — Stuart.

Rich for a moment. — The British ship Britannia was wrecked off the coast of Brazil, and had on board a large consignment of Spanish dollars. In the hope of saving some of them, a number of barrels were brought on deck, but the vessel went to pieces so fast that the only hope for life was by taking at once to the boats. The last boat was about to push off, when a young midshipman went back to see if any one was still on board. To his surprise there set a man on deck with a hatchet in his hand, with which he had broken open several of the casks, the contents of which he was now heaping up about him. "What are you doing there?" shouted the youth. "Don't you know the ship is fast going to pieces?" "The ship may go," said the man; "I have lived a poor wretch all my life, and I am determined to die rich." All remonstrances were answered only by another flourish of the hatchet, and he was left to his fate.

16, 17. (16) labor, his earnings, acquisitions.[d] The Heb. word includes the result as well as the process of labor. to life,[e] put for all success and blessing (ch. xi. 19). fruit, better, profit. to sin,[f] "all the profit that the wicked make they use in the service of sin, which tends only to death (Rom. vi. 21). — Pul. Com. (17) way, etc., better read, "A way to life is he who heedeth correction;" i. e. such a man guides others to life. His example is efficacious. erreth, better as marg. causeth to err, puts others astray.

True labor. — The labor of the righteous tendeth to life or "serves as life." 1. Because it is a good thing in itself. 2. Because it procures good, each stroke earning its pay. 3. Because it increases, and that on forever, making us holier and happier, and making others holier and happier through the endless ages. — Miller.

The way of life. — To grow in life, what a heaven is that! Jesus Christ said He came to give life, and to give it more abundantly; to give it wave upon wave, and billow upon billow, until it should utterly drive out of the soul every remnant and shadow of death. To know whether we are in the way of life we must inquire whether we are keeping instruction, or whether we are yielding ourselves up to our own will, and allowing passion to dominate the soul. If we are prepared to accept reproof, we may be sure that the spirit of true wisdom is still within us. — Peop. Bib. — The niggardliness of increasing wealth. — A young man was in the receipt of a decent salary in some merchant's office — just enough to provide him with every comfort and some luxuries, but nothing to spare "worth saving," as we say. He was liberal to the full measure of his ability, and brought out his guinea to religious and benevolent objects as freely as any. He had a bequest from a distant relative (some three or four thousand pounds, I believe) suddenly left him. Now, mark the sequel, and see what a fool human nature can make of itself. My informant tells me that a gentleman who had been in the habit of receiving this man's annual contribution to some philanthropic society, con-a Egyptian proverb — "A youth has a back that he may attend to his teacher."

b The greatest talkers have always the least to say.

"Words are often everywhere as the minute hands of the soul, more important than even the hour hands of actions" —Richter.

c "The facts of human society are not ignored. Below the surface of this vs. there perhaps lies a grave irony. The rich man, trusting in his riches, is tempted to make them his strong city — to have no other tower of strength. Comp. Pr. xviii. 11." — Spk. Com.

"Money buys transient rights; money buys the land, but it can never buy the landscape. He holds the title deeds who really and truly loves the estate."— Peop. Bib.

d 2 Jno. 8.

e "According to the constitution of things righteous labor tends to life, bodily, mental, and spiritual; the life of self, and the life of others."— Dav. Thomas.

f 1 Tim. vi. 10; Ro. vi. 21.

"Each day is a new life and an abridgement of the whole. I will so live as if I counted every day my first and my last; as if I began to live but then, and should live no more afterwards." — Bishop Hall.

"While high thinking does not always prevent low living, it is also most true that there can be no high and holy living without high and holy thinking." —Jams McLeod.

"Man wants but little here below, nor wants that little long."—Goldsmith.

"The battle of life is worth all that it costs to those who are victors."—The Christian Intelligencer.

"All wickedness is weakness."—Milton.

gratulated himself that on his next visit to the happy legatee he should probably get "first fruits," "thank-offerings," besides the annual guinea. A few months after the bequest he called, and, to his surprise, found the metamorphosed man would not give him a farthing. No representations of the astonished visitor could make the slightest impression. At last he said, "Why, Mr. ———, you always used to be most liberal, and I cannot account for your present mood at all. I thought that having, as I hear, come in for a considerable legacy, you would probably have doubled your subscription." "That," said the unhappy man, "is the very reason why I can give you nothing. While I was in receipt merely of my salary I could save nothing, but now that I have a larger sum, which I am not compelled to touch, and which will go on accumulating, every little I can add to it will tell." And from this he could not be beaten off.

18. with lying lips, better, is of lying lips. "It is often honey on the lips and venom in the heart."[a] slander, to slay reputations. fool, he injures his neighbor and gains everybody's illwill for himself.

Three degrees of moral foolishness. — I. A liar. 1. A liar is a fool because he fights for a weak cause; 2. Because he makes use of a weak weapon; 3. Because by lying he degrades his moral character. II. A liar who conceals hatred by lying. III. A liar who utters scandal. — Hom. Com.

Lying. — Among tribes ignorant of the methods of civilized warfare we find weapons which are little better than slim rods, and, although their points are sharp and poisoned, yet they proclaim their weakness when they come into collision with an experienced swordsman. Lying is such a weapon, and its use reveals the utter folly of him who wields it. It can no more stand against truth than the wooden spear of a savage can turn aside the thrust of a Damascus blade. — W. Harris.

19. multitude of words,[b] much talking puts a man in great danger of saying foolish and sinful things. refraineth, restraineth, holdeth in wise governance.[c]

Winged words (vs. 19). — I. The tongue's license. 1. Hyperbole; 2. Egotism; 3. Trifling; 4. Ribaldry; 5. Talebearing; 6. Slander. II. Its evil result. 1; The dissipation of religious life; 2. The uncontrollable diffusion of the slander; 3. The Satanic malignancy of the temper. — W. W. Whythe.

Speaking evil. — Consider, first, that though it is equally of bad consequence to society that men should have either good or ill characters which they do not deserve, yet when you say some good of a man which he does not deserve, there is no wrong done him in particular; whereas, when you say evil of a man which he does not deserve, here is a direct formal injury done to him. Secondly, a good man will, upon every occasion, and often without any, say all the good he can of everybody, but so far as he is a good man, will never be disposed to speak evil of any, unless there be some other reason for it besides barely that it is the truth. — Bp. Butler.

20, 21. (20) choice silver, of exceeding value are the words he speaks. little worth,[d] lit., "as a very little thing." (21) feed many, with sound instruction and guidance. for want of, some translate, "through him who wanteth understanding."[e]

Speech of wise and foolish (vs. 20). — I. The speech of the good man is valuable, that of the other is worthless. II. The speech of the good man is nourishing, that of the other is killing. III. The speech of the good man is wise, that of the other is foolish. IV. The speech of the good man is acceptable, that of the other is perverse. — Thomas.

Blessings of the tongue. — The lips of the righteous feed many because they supply a need. Man needs a medium by which to express the value of his labor or his merchandise, and silver supplies this want. And he likewise needs a medium by which to express his thoughts, and speech is this medium. But unless it is the speech of a just man it will be a curse and not a blessing. It must convey good thinking if it is to be as choice silver to a needy man. The prisoner who stands at the bar charged with a crime of which he is innocent feels that the tongue of the man who pleads his cause is more precious to him than much silver. To the man who is seeking after God, the tongue of one who can tell him "words whereby he shall be saved" is as choice silver (Acts. xi. 14). The words of Peter were so esteemed by Cornelius.

[a] "Of all the vices to which human nature is subject, treachery is the most infamous and detestable, being compounded of fraud, cowardice, and revenge. The greatest wrong will not justify it, as it destroys those principles of mutual confidence and security by which only society can exist."—Quoted by Dav. Thomas.

[b] Job xxxv. 16: 1. Ti. v. 13.

[c] "Never speak but when you have something to say. Wherefore shouldst thou run, seeing thou hast no tidings?"—Bp. Butler.

"He is wise that hath learned to speak little with others, and much with himself and God. How much might be gained for our souls if we would make a right use of this silence!"—Arch. Leighton.

[d] "A popular and proverbial circumlocution for the idea of utter nothingness or worthlessness."—O Zöckler.

[e] "The wise guide others to safety; the fool, empty-headed and empty-hearted, involves others like himself in destruction."—Spk. Com.

"A wicked man hath his worst side inward. Though sinful persons make never so great a show on the outside, yet there is nothing within them worth

The heart of the Ethiopian eunuch was more rejoiced by the preaching of Philip the evangelist than it would have been by the possession of all the treasure of his mistress (Acts viii. 26–39). The words of Him who was "the Just One" (Acts iii. 14) are and ever will be "a strength to the needy in his distress" (Isa. xxv. 4); more precious to those who are conscious of their soul-poverty "than thousands of gold and silver" (Psalm cxix. 72); and it is in proportion as men are like Him in character and disposition that their speech will bless the world. — Hom. Com.

22. it maketh rich, not the fruits of man's toil, but the blessing wh. God makes to rest upon it is the true riches. addeth, trans. "and labor addeth nothing thereto,"[a] i. e. as supplementary to the Div. blessing. Stuart suggests: that sorrows are not of necessity increased by riches, when it is Jehovah who bestows them: but riches procured by unlawful means bring many sorrows.

God's blessing the greatest riches (vs. 22). — I. In what respects the blessing of God may be said to make rich. 1. Because it is in reality the source of all wealth; 2. Because it is in itself the greatest wealth. II. The peculiar happiness of the person so enriched. 1. With all other riches there is a mixture of sorrow to embitter them; 2. To the wealth God gives He adds no sorrow. Learn — (1) In what spirit to address yourselves to every duty in life; (2) What to look to as your chief portion. — Simeon.

Effects of wealth. — I have a rich neighbor who is always so busy that he has no leisure to laugh; the whole business of his life is to get money, and more money, that he may still get more and more money; he is still drudging on, and says that Solomon says, "The hand of the diligent maketh rich." And it is true indeed; but he considers not that it is not in the power of riches to make a man happy: for it was wisely said by a man of great observation, that "There may be as many miseries beyond riches as on this side them." And yet God deliver us from pinching poverty, and grant that, having a competency, we may be content and thankful. Let us not repine, or so much as think the gifts of God unequally dealt, if we see another abound with riches, when, as God knows, the cares that are the keys that keep those riches hang often so heavily at the rich man's girdle, that they clog him with weary days and restless nights, even when others sleep quietly. We see but the outside of the rich man's happiness; few consider him to be like the silkworm, that, when she seems to play, is at the very same time spinning her own bowels, and consuming herself; and this many rich men do, loading themselves with corroding cares, to keep what they have probably unconscionably got. — Walton.

23—25. (23) sport, it is his pleasure and play.[b] hath wisdom, R. V., "And so is wisdom to a man of understanding;" i. e. the wise man finds his refreshment in living a wise and prudent life, which is as easy and as pleasant to him as mischief is to the vicious. The wisdom intended is practical religion, the fear of God directing and showing itself in daily action. — Pul. Com. (24) The fear, i. e. the thing wh. he fears. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."[c] be granted, by God. (25) whirlwind, 2 Ki. ii. 1, R. V., "When the w. passeth the wicked is no more." By the fig. of the great storm is indicated the suddenness, the thoroughness, and the helplessness of the sinner's ruin. — Miller. everlasting foundation, comp. Mat. vii. 24–27; Ps. cxxv. 1.

The desire of the righteous granted (vs. 24) — I. Who is the righteous man? 1. Whom God counts so; 2. Whom God makes so; 3. Who is practically righteous. II. What are his desires? 1. Communion with God; 2. Enjoyment of holy ordinances; 3. The personal presence of God. III. What is meant by their being granted? IV. Application. 1. There are other desires than those of the righteous; 2. Art thou righteous? — Bunyan.

26. vinegar, or the sour wine used by the peasants. smoke, of wood, wh. makes the eyes smart. so, causing like annoyance and vexation. sluggard, who loiters on his errands. "Laziness is bad for the man himself, but is most vexatious to those who are unfortunate enough to employ him in their service."

Idle people. — Idle persons are like wens in the face, which receive of the body's nourishment, but serve only to disfigure it. Those that are no workers in God's account are "disorderly walkers." Augustus built an Apragopolis, anything. Therefore, do not too much magnify and admire them, nor too far depend on them. For better things are not certainly to be expected from them than are in them." — Dod.

[a] "This is not to be taken literally, as though perchance labor were in itself cast aside, and the Oriental indolence commended: nor again is the privilege given to the pious of being released from ordinary human toils, and of folding their hands in reliance on their powerful Friend: the aim is only, after the emphatic and one-sided manner of the proverb, to make prominent the other side of the case overlooked by restless toilers." — Hupfeld.

Eccl. v. 19.

"The sluggard looks for prosperity without diligence; the practical atheist from diligence alone; the sound-hearted Christian from the blessing of God in the exercise of diligence." —Preacher's Com.

[b] Lit. "It is like a laugh to the fool, to execute evil counsel."

[c] Ga. vi. 7; Job iii. 25; Pr. xi. 27; Is. lxvi. 4.

"Longings for holiness are fulfilled by painful affliction; prayers are answered by crosses. Our Father's dispensations are not what they seem to be, but what He is pleased to make them." — Bridges.

"Idleness is a constant sin, and labor is a duty. Idleness is the devil's home for temptation, and for unprofitable, distracting musings; while labor profiteth others and ourselves." —Baxter.

"He who is a Christian in little things is not a little Christian: he is the greatest Christian, and the most useful."—Preachers' Com.

"That is the true life — the life of active employment, whatever be the work God has given you to do, and the station He has appointed you to fill. I repeat the busy, active life is always the happy one."—Madcuff.

"Let us learn to regard our life here as the school-time, the training-ground, the awful yet delightful threshold for the eternal ages of the life with God."—Bishop Thorold.

"Without prayer men are as flowers trying to grow in the dark. With prayer men are as flowers growing in the sunshine. The man who prays finds God — finds hope also, and eternal life."—T. K. Beecher.

"Great wants proceed from great wealth; but they are undutiful children, for they sink wealth down to poverty."—Home.

a Job viii. 13; xi. 20; Ps. cxii. 10.

"Hope is the daughter of Faith, but such as is a staff to her aged mother, and will produce a bold and wise profession of the truth before men, as also prayer to God. It is as the cork upon the net; though the lead on the one side sinks it down, yet the cork on the other keeps it up."—J. Trapp.

The more we do in the service of God, the more we are enabled to do. "The Atlantic Ocean is swept by a city void of business; but God made not the world to be the nursery of idleness. The Ethiopians (as the historian observeth) would acquaint their youth that they were born to labor, by accustoming them betimes to fling great stones. Amongst the Turks every man must follow some trade, the Grand Seigneur himself not excepted. The censores morum among the Romans were to observe who were diligent, and who negligent in their vocations, and accordingly to commend or condemn them. The Grecians, according to Solon's law, were great discouragers of them that, like vermin, lived only to eat what others earn. The council of the Areopagites inquired how every man lived, and punished such as they found idle. The devils themselves are diligent about their deeds of darkness; creatures void of life are serviceable in their places and stations; angels, nay, God Himself, is always working. An idle person cannot find, either in heaven or hell, a pattern. — Swinnocke.

27. prolongth days, R. V., marg. "addeth;" a statement frequently repeated in this book; here the antithesis may be thus expressed. "The fear of Jehovah makes great days, but the years of the wicked shall be made little." — Miller.

Long life. — The fear of the Lord prolongs life because, other things being equal, godliness tends to bodily health. A good man governs his life by some kind of law, his passions and inclinations do not play the lord over his conscience and will. This has a beneficial influence upon his bodily health. He has contentment with his present lot, trust in his God amid all the anxieties of life, and hope for the future. Such a state of mind tends to soundness of bodily health, whereas the manner of life of a godless man is opposed to health and consequently to long life. If a complicated machine is permitted to work with some of its parts improperly adjusted and fretting against each other at every turn of the wheel, the friction will soon wear away the parts, and ere long they will cease to act. A soul without godliness is a complicated mechanism which has never been rightly adjusted. There is no ruling principle, no guiding hand, one passion wars against another, the man bears the burden of life alone, he is at times a prey to the fears spoken of in vs. 24, and the rule of all these devils in the soul has a tendency to wear out the body before its time. This is a truth universally admitted. — Hom. Com. — Long life. — The Lord says He will multiply the days of those who love Him, and though that is not fulfilled in the letter it is more than fulfilled in the spirit. Days are not to be numbered always; they are to be measured and weighed. A day to the wise man is more than a day to the fool. The wise man makes the most of his time; every moment is a jewel, every hour is a crown, every day is an opportunity for securing blessings larger than can be contained within the limits of time. The years of the wicked are shortened, because there is nothing in them; though their number be many, their length is short; they come and go without improvement, and the wicked man is no wiser at the end than he was at the beginning. — Parker.

28. gladness, bec. it shall surely gain its fruition. perish,[a] that which the wicked eagerly hope for shall come to naught.

True and false hope (vs. 28).— I. All men cherish some sort of hope. II. True hope ends in happiness. III. False hope ends in disappointment.— Whythe.

False hope.— A "hope" is to some like a passport, which one keeps quietly in his pocket till the time for the journey, and then produces it. Or like life-preservers, which hang useless around the vessel until the hour of danger comes, when the captain calls on every passenger to save himself; and then they are taken down and blown up, and each man, with his hope under his arm, strikes out for the land; and so such men would keep their religious hope hanging until death comes, and then take it down and inflate it, that it may buoy them up, and float them over the dark river to the heavenly shore. Or as the inhabitants of Block Island keep their boats hauled high upon the beach, and only use them now and then, when they would cross to the mainland; so such men keep their hopes high and dry upon the shore of life, only to be used when they have to cross the flood that divides this island of time from the mainland of eternity.—Beecher.

29, 30. (29) way of the Lord, i. e. the way of His commandments. But some understand the Div. order of the world. In the long run it surely turns out to be for the upright, and against the wicked. strength, R. V., "strong hold;" "wherever he goes he is in a castle." destruction, R. V., "But it is a destruction." The two effects of the Law of God are contrasted, according as it is obeyed or neglected. While it is protection to the righteous, it is condemnation and ruin to sinners. (30) never be removed, comp. ch. xiii. 3: Ps. xxxvii. 22. inhabit the earth, R. V., "dwell in the land." The punishment of exile was threatened upon the Jews for their disobedience, and they are still suffering this retribution.

The Lord's way (vs. 29).—I. The Lord has a way for man to walk in. 1. He has a way for Himself; 2. He has a way for His creatures; 3. He has a way for man, the way of social justice and Divine worship. II. The man who walks in this way gets strength. 1. Intellectual strength; 2. Moral strength; 3. Increasing strength.—Thomas.

Jehovah's way of providence.— Faith in a personal God, in a Divine Saviour, makes this "way" also "strength to the upright." If a seaman has faith in his captain, this gives him strength for his duty even in the roughest weather. He feels that he is not altogether left to the mercy of the blind elements, but that there is a strong and wise will guiding the ship. So confidence in an All-wise Father, in a King who "can do no wrong," is the stronghold of the upright amidst all the apparent contradictions and mysteries of life. He knows who is at the wheel of all human affairs, that and the knowledge that "God is Light, and in Him is no darkness at all," makes what would otherwise overwhelm him in doubt, and consequently in weakness, a source of strength, a power of life.—Preacher's Com.

> "When He folds the cloud about Him, > Firm within it stands His throne;"

31, 32. (31) bringeth forth, "as a tree full of life and sap brings forth its fruit." cut out, R. V., "cut off;" or cut down, as are unfruitful trees.[a] (32) know, find always, as if instinctively, what is acceptable. frowardness, all kinds of deceit and ill-nature.[b]

A gossiping tongue.—A man who, for a moment's gossiping gratification, drops an idle word affecting a neighbor's character, resembles that Scotchman who, from partiality to the flora of his native land, sowed a little thistle-down in the British colony where he had raised his tabernacle, and where that nuisance to agriculturists had been unknown up to that time. It grew and flourished; and breezes—like the active wind of talk, that soon propagates a slander—carried the winged seeds hither and thither, to found for their obnoxious species thousands of new homes. It is as unsafe to keep company with one whose tongue is hung too loosely as to ride in a vehicle whose linch-pins are loose.—Robertson.

CHAPTER THE ELEVENTH.

1. false balance,[c] used literally, but also as representing all unrighteous dealings. With the keen bargaining spirit characteristic of the Jews, this must always have been to them a besetting sin.[d] just weight, lit. a full stone, bec. stones were used instead of metal weights.

Weights and measures (vs. 1).—I. The text brings before us this solemn and important truth, that God sees and takes notice of all business transactions. II. The just weight being the simple but expressive representation of all fair dealing, the words now before us mean that all fair dealing is God's delight. III. There must be just dealing towards God as well as towards man.—Brown.

Just weights.—The farthing kept back from the child, and the ounce taken from the pound, are as much marked by Him as the short wages given to the man, the unjust sentence passed upon the prisoner. Dr. Guthrie says "God sees the water in the milk, and the sand in the sugar." There are no great and small transactions in a moral sense, one action contains the sin as much as another. God, who here tells men that He abominates a false balance, declares by His condemnation of it that there is such a thing as a true weight: that there is that which He recognizes as justice between man and man. And much that men call "a full stone," a "fair day's wages," is not so regarded by God. It is not dealing truly with a man to give him the smallest possible fearful storms, and mountainous billows traverse its surface, but scientific men say it is so quiet down in the depths that if you could stretch a rope of sand from one side of the ocean to the other, there is not disturbance enough to dissolve it. So amid the direst storms of life the believer's heart is kept in perfect peace, a peace which the world gives not, and which the world does not take away."—Hom. Com.

"The rod itself can only be useful where there is something within that can be quickened into beneficent activity."—Parker.

a "The abuse of God's gift of speech will lead ultimately to its forfeiture. There shall, at last, be the silence of shame and confusion."—Spk. Com.

b "When God's honor and the edification and improvement of one's neighbor is not the chief end of your speaking, it is a sign that Eternal Wisdom has not yet wholly sanctified our hearts."—Starke.

c Le. xix. 36; De. xxv. 13-16.

d Comp. Mat. vii. 12; Phi. iv. 8; 1 Th. iv 6.

"He is as much concerned with the manner in which we buy and sell as with the style in which we pray; nay, more so, for his chief interest is with our real, daily, practical life."—Pul. Com.

"That whereby thou takest from others shall add unto the weight of thine own punishment; that whereby thou addest in measuring for thyself shall mak God to take away from the measure of His mercy towards thee."—Jermin.

"As the tree is, so is the fruit. As the man's heart is, so, with rare exceptions, are his words."

a Pr. xvi. 18; xviii. 12.

b "Lowly souls become full of wisdom as the low place becomes full of water."—Rabbinical paraphrase.

Lu. xiv. 10, 11.

"Everyone that is truly godly hath a faithful guide and an upright counselor in his own breast. A sound heart is the stern of the soul, and a good conscience is the pilot to govern it."—Dod.

c Eph. vi. 14; 1 Pe. iii. 13.

"Being 'humble' not only invites 'Wisdom,' and makes her feel at home; not only flows from Wisdom because she is at home, but actually 'is Wisdom.' It would not do to say, Has humility entered? There also enters Wisdom; for humility is wisdom, and could not exist unless Wisdom had entered already."—Miller.

"A great part of life's labor consists in following a crooked course, and then trying to make it appear a straight one. The defense of it doubles the labor"—Arnot.

A mother explained to her little daughter, who could not comprehend her father's death, that God had sent for him, and would by-and-by send for them all, how soon they could not tell. "Well, then, mother," said the child, "if God is amount for the work he does — to take advantage of his poverty or ignorance to beat him down to the lowest sum for which his need will induce him to give his labor, and thereby condemn him to all the evils of insufficient means "Behold!" says Carlyle, "supply and demand is not the one law of nature; cash payment is not the sole nexus of man with man — how far from it! Deep, far deeper than supply and demand are laws, obligations sacred as man's life itself!" This is the law of the Divine kingdom: "All things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them" (Matt. vii. 12). Less than this is a "false balance," this is the "full stone," which is God's "delight."— Hom. Com.

2. pride cometh,[a] lit. "cometh pride, cometh also shame." lowly,[b] derived from the Chaldee to conceal, and denotes strictly those who hide themselves, or renounce self, the humble.

The advent and evil of pride (vs. 2). — I. The advent of pride. How does it come? 1. By associating only with inferiors; 2. By practically ignoring the true standards; 3. By a practical disregard to the majesty of God. II. The evil of pride. See Bible examples. 1. Shame of folly; 2. Shame of guilt. — Thomas.

Pride. — The foulest stain and highest absurdity in our nature is pride. It is the root of unbelief. Men cannot submit to the righteousness of Christ, and pride cleaves to them like a pitched shirt to the skin, or like leprosy to the wall. No sharp culture of ploughing and harrowing will clear the ground of it. The foul weed will be sure to spring up again with the next kindly rain. This diabolical sin has brought more scourges on my back than anything else; and it is of so insinuating a nature that I know not how to part with it. I hate it, and love it; I quarrel with it, and embrace it; I dread it, and yet suffer it to lie down in my bosom. — Berridge.

3. integrity, wholeness, simplicity, sincerity. guide them, by the quick sense of right and wrong,[c] as a shepherd leads his sheep in the path of security and peace. perverseness, or slipperiness. Pul. Com., "putting a stumbling block in others' way." transgressors, R. V., "the treacherous." destroy them, lit. "lay hold on them with violent force."

The value of integrity (vs. 3). — I. Direct attention to the intrinsic worth and excellency of integrity. 1. It is in exact correspondence with the character and mind of our Creator; 2. It is conformity to the Divine will; 3. It imparts stability and strength to all the other virtues and excellencies of the human character. II. The benefits and advantages which it confers upon the individual who possesses it. 1. It guides him in the affairs of life; 2. It saves from doubts and misgivings; 3. It secures the good wishes, assistance, and co-operation of others; 4. It produces peace and satisfaction of mind; 5. It has advantages also for the season of adversity. III. The benefits which it confers upon society at large. 1. Society makes efforts to secure integrity between man and man; 2. It confers the power to do good; 3. It commends religion and the Christian profession; It has great benefits in the final issue of things. — Redpath.

Putting off repentance. — A hermit was conducted by an angel into a wood, where he saw an old man cutting down boughs to make up a burden. When it was large he tied it up, and attempted to lift it on his shoulders and carry it away. But finding it very heavy, he laid it down again, cut more wood, and heaped it on, and then tried again to carry it off. This he repeated several times, always adding something to the load, after trying in vain to raise it from the ground. In the meantime the hermit, astonished at the old man's folly, desired the angel to explain what this meant. "You behold," said he, "in the foolish old man a representation of those who, being made sensible of the burden of their sins, resolve to repent, but soon grow weary, and instead of lessening their burden, increase it every day. At each trial they find the task heavier than before, and so put it off a little longer, in vain hoping that they will by-and-by be more able to accomplish it. Thus they go on adding to their burden till it grows too heavy to be borne, and then, in despair of God's mercy and with their sins unrepented of, they lie down and die. Turn again, my son, and behold the end of the old man, whom thou sawest heaping up a load of boughs." The hermit looked and saw him in vain attempting to remove the pile, which was now accumulated far beyond his strength to raise. His feeble limbs tottered over their burden, the poor remains of his strength were fast ebbing away, the darkness of death was gathering around him, and after a convulsive and impotent attempt to lift the pile, he fell down and expired.— S. S. Times.— "Honesty is the best policy." —A poor but honest youth.— A lad who was on his way to an uncle, to ask aid for a sick sister and her children, found a wallet containing a sum of money. The help sought was refused, and the distressed family was pinched with want. The boy revealed his fortune to his mother, but expressed a doubt about using any portion of the money. She confirmed his good resolution, and the pocketbook was advertised, and the owner found. Being a man of wealth, upon learning the history of the family, he presented the whole sum to the sick mother, and took the boy into his service, who ultimately became one of the most successful merchants of the day. Honesty always brings its reward,— to the conscience if not to the pocket.

going to send for us soon, and we don't know just when, hadn't we better begin to pack up and get ready to go?" This incident, related to the wounded and dying inmates of an army hospital, was the means of much good.

4, profit not, i. e. afford no security. day of wrath, any time of national calamity, such as a siege. Then riches rather increase the peril than provide a safeguard. righteousness, the men of character are always the men of influence and power in times of calamity. from death, peril of death.[a]

Riches.— What is there that the rich man hopes not to do? He can buy honors and offices, he can buy out faults and offenses, yea, foolish Magus thought the Holy Ghost Himself might be had for money; and Satan presumed that this bait would even catch the Son of God. Yet what can riches do? Can they put off the gout, assuage grief, thrust out cares, suspend death, prevent hell, or bribe Satan? A satin sleeve can as well heal a broken arm. Indeed this they can do; they can anger God, hurt men, bar the gates of heaven, open the gates of hell, and forward souls to confusion. They are false friends that will be sure never to fail men but when they have need of them. Sickness will besiege thee, death will summon thee, God will pass His doom upon thee; in all this, what can riches avail thee? Our manifold receipts shall but greaten our accounts; and the moderate estate will have the easier reckoning. Riches are a pit whereinto we soon slip, but can hardly scramble out. Æsop hath a fable of the two frogs that, in the time of drought, when the marshes were dry, consulted what was best to be done. One advised to go down into a deep well, because it was likely the water would not fail there. The other answered, "But if it do fail, how shall we get up again?" Small puddle, light gains, will not serve some; they must plunge into deep wells, excessive profits; but they do not consider how they should get out again. So it comes to pass that either they are famished for want of grace, or drowned in a deluge of riches. If this world be a sea over which we must swim to the land of promise, I do not see what use there is of this abundant luggage, unless it be to sink us in the waters.— Adams.

[a] "A good conscience will make death easy, and take off the terror of it; it is the privilege of the righteous only not to be hurt of the second death, and so not much hurt by the first."— Mat. Henry.

5, 6. (5) perfect, upright, blameless. direct, marg. rectify; make plain. fall . . wickedness, wh. thus is found to bear quite other fruitage than he expected. "The good man, not blinded by passion, follows a safe and direct path of life; but the wicked, led by his own evil propensities, and losing the light of conscience (John xi. 10), stumbles and falls." (6) transgressors, R. V., "they that deal treacherously." taken, as if in a trap. naughtiness, greedy desire. 1 Sa. xvii. 28.

Character inherited. — An old man died a few years ago in the Massachusetts State prison. He was seventy-six years old, and had spent the last eight years of his life in a cell in that gloomy jail. His wife for years had been a prisoner there too, and so had his daughter, and seven of his sons. Were not "the iniquities of the father visited upon the children!" In that same State, seventy years ago, a good minister died, who for forty-one years had been a beloved pastor over the same church. He was the fourteenth eldest son of the same name and family who had been a preacher of the Gospel. Since his death, one hundred of his descendants have been Christians, and eight of his sons and grandsons have also been ministers. Through that blessed family, for many long years, the Great Father of love has been "showing mercy to thousands of them that love Him and keep His commandments."

"Goodness and blessednees are actually identical, the reverse and the obverse sides of the same coin. If a man is made good he is made blessed; but if he is made blessed to all appearance, and not good, the blessedness proves to be an illusion. It could not possibly avail to be justified by faith, unless we were made just by faith; a sore body is not healed by covering it up, a dead man is not

Inner light. —

He that hath light within his own clear breast
May sit in the center and enjoy bright day;
But he that hides a dark soul and foul thoughts, quickened by a smiling mask." — Harper.

Benighted walks under the midday sun;
Himself is his own dungeon. — Milton.

7. expectation, "that which he hoped for and set his heart upon, worldly prosperity, long life, impunity, — all are out off, and the moral government of God is confirmed, by his death (Ps. lxxiii. 17–19)." unjust men, lit., of vanities. i. e., men of vanity.[a] R. V., marg. "strong," i. e. self-confident.

The terrible in human history (vs. 7). — There are two terrible events here. I. Death meeting the wicked man. 1. Death does not wait for reformation of character; 2. The greatest enemies of God and His universe are overcome. II. Hope leaving the human soul. — Thomas.

Hope. — Men derive almost the whole of their happiness from hope. The wicked man laughs at the righteous because he lives by hope; but the wicked man himself does the same with this difference, that whilst the hopes of the one are coeval with eternity, those of the other are bounded by time. The present situation of the wicked man never yields him the pleasure which he wishes and expects, if his hope is deferred, his heart is sick; if it is accomplished, he is still unsatisfied; but he comforts himself with some other hope, like a child who sees a rainbow on the top of a neighboring hill, and runs to take hold of it, but sees it as far removed from him as before. Thus the life of a wicked man is spent in vain wishes, and toils, and hopes, till death kills at once his body, his hope and his happiness. — Lawson.

8. is delivered, from calamities wh. fall upon the wicked.[b] in his stead takes his place, enters into the trouble. Thus Haman was hanged on the gallows which he had erected for Mordecai (Esth. vii. 10); Daniel's accusers were cast into the den of lions from which he was saved (Dan. vi. 24; comp. Isa xliii. 4).

Trouble in relation to the righteous and the wicked (vs. 8). — All men are in trouble. I. The righteous are going out of trouble. 1. Now partially; 2. In the future completely. II. The wicked are going into trouble. 1. The trouble they are going to is unmitigated; 2. Unending. — Thomas.

Rev. John Elliot, missionary among the American Indians, having been out at sea in a boat, it was overset by a larger vessel, when he immediately sunk, without the most distant expectation of rising any more. In this situation he was perfectly composed, and resigned to His Heavenly Father's will. He could say within himself, "The will of the Lord be done." His life, however, was spared. But the following circumstance, as closely connected with it, was rather remarkable. Many profane persons were exceedingly enraged against him for laboring among the Indians; and one of this description, hearing of his narrow escape, anxiously and profanely wished he had been drowned. But within a few days that very man was drowned, in the very place where Mr. Elliot found deliverance. — Whitecross.

9. hypocrite, R. V., "godless man;" Job viii. 13. mouth, the agent of his deceptions. "The artificer of that shrewdness which is the instrument of wickedness." through knowledge, or superior discernment.

Hypocrisy and knowledge (vs. 9). — From the text we may infer — I. That hypocrisy is destructive. It — 1. Implies the pernicious; 2. Employs the pernicious. II. That knowledge is restorative. — Thomas.

Universality of hypocrisy. — The Emperor Frederick III., when one said unto him he would go and find some place where no hypocrites inhabited, told him he must travel, then, far enough beyond the Sauromatæ, or the Frozen Ocean; for yet, when he came there, he should find a hypocrite if he found himself there. And it is true that every man is a hypocrite. Hypocrisy is a lesson that every man readily takes in. It continues with age, it appears with infancy: the wise and learned practice it; the duller and more rude attain unto it. All are not fit for the wars; learning must have the picked and choicest wits; arts must have leisure and pains; but all sorts are apt enough, and thrive in the mystery of dissimulation. The whole throng of mankind, the whole world, is but a shop of counterfeit wares, — a theatre of hypocritical disguises. Grace is the only antidote. — Spencer.

10, 11. (10) goeth well with, in the prosperity of. Perhaps meaning when the righteous are set in places of authority and honor. shouting, the shout of rejoicing at the loss of evil influence. (11) blessing, implying the active a "Immortality and a future retribution are presumptively suggested in this passage."—O. Zöckler.

"His most strong hope shall come to nothing. He thought he had taken hold of God; but it is but with him as with a child that catcheth at the shadow on the wall, which he thinks he holds fast. But he only thinks so."—Trapp.

b "This proposition cannot be the result of experimental observation, but only the fresh, vigorous expression of faith in God's justice, such as believes where it does not see."—Elster.

"I bless God," said Dr. Watts, "I can lie down with comfort to-night, not being anxious whether I awake in this world or another."

"When Alexander saw himself wounded and in danger of death, he then saw the vanity of those flatterers that would have persuaded him he was a god. So when we see those things upon which we set our hearts, as if our chief good, as if a deity were in them, to be wounded and ready to perish, let us learn to alter our thoughts of them, to take off our hearts from them." — Jeremiah Burroughs.

"Not one, but many blessings, are on the head of the righteous: the blessing of peace, the blessing of plenty, the blessing of health, and the blessing of grace, shall be upon them." — Muffet.

benevolence: or the prayers he offers for the city's good. The term may, however, mean the blessing wh. God gives the city for the sake of the righteous who are in it. exalted, in a condition of security. mouth of the wicked, the medium for the expression of their evil advice and impious language.[a]

The city is exalted. — That community is blessed where each citizen enjoys freedom to live his life and do his best for himself and others without trampling on the rights of his fellows. Tyranny on the one hand provokes rebellion on the other, and misery to both parties is the issue. The head is intended to think and plan for the rest of the body, the limbs are intended to carry out the designs of the head; if either the one or the other fails to perform its work, suffering comes to the whole frame. So in the body politic. Righteous men strive for the union of all classes for the good of all, and this unity exalts a city — gives peace at home, and is the surest defense against foes without. . . . A more vivid illustration of what has been said here concerning a righteous man cannot be found than in the life and labors of William the Silent, Prince of Holland. This noble man gave his all to the liberation of the Netherlands from Spanish tyranny. Motley says: "The people were grateful and affectionate, for they trusted the character of their Father William," and not all the clouds which calumny could collect could dim to their eyes the one to whom they were accustomed, in their darkest calamities, to look for light. As long as he lived, he was the guiding star of a whole brave nation, and when he died, the little children cried in the streets."— Hom. Com. — The death of the wicked. — Illustrations of the latter clause of vs. 10 abound in history. "Memorable in the prison experiences of Herod Agrippa was the arrival of news that the tyrant of Capreæ was dead. Immediately on the death of Tiberius, Marsyas, Agrippa's faithful bondslave, hastened to his master's dungeon, and communicated the joyful intelligence, saying, in the Hebrew language, "The lion is dead." The centurion on guard heard the rejoicing, inquired as to the cause, ordered the royal prisoner's chains to be struck off, and invited him to supper. But more memorable was the exultation, widely felt and cruelly expressed, at Agrippa's own death — that loathsome death, so strange in its surroundings, of which a tale is told in the Acts of the Apostles. The inhabitants of Sebaste and Cæsarea, as we learn from Josephus, and particularly Herod's own soldiers, indulged in the most brutal rejoicings at his death, heaping his memory with reproaches. . . . In his account of the death of the Emperor Maximin, Gibbon says, "It is easier to conceive than to describe the universal joy of the Roman world on the fall of the tyrant." The death of Richelieu is said to have been felt by France like the relief from a nightmare; from the king to the lowest rhymster, all joined in the burden of the couplets that proclaimed it — Il est parti, il a pliè bagage, ce cardinal.— Jacox.

12, 13. (12) despiseth, showeth contempt for: reviles. Only the heartless man is unable to find some goodness in others. holdeth his peace, watchful lest he should make mischief. He is considerate of the reputation of others. (13) talebearer, "one trading as a pedler in scandal, whose propensity to talk leads him to betray confidence." — Fausset. faithful spirit, a steadfast, trusty man.[b]

Types of character in social life (vs. 12, 13). — Here four distinct types of character. I. The insolent. II. The respectful. III. The tattler. IV. The trustworthy. — Thomas.

Character formed by association. — A man's belief is not the only thing that works upon him. There is a great mistake in saying that as a man believes so is he, if you mean that his character depends upon his belief in any technical theological truth. What a man is depends in a great measure upon his father and mother, and brothers and sisters, and friends; that is, it depends partly on the things that he believes, and partly upon the influences that are working upon him in the family, in the society, and in the party to which he belongs. There are a thousand and one circumstances that have much to do with what a man is, and his character is not formed alone by His technical beliefs. — Beecher.

14. no counsel, R. V., "wise guidance," power to steer or guide; no helmsmanship; lit. no piloting of a ship by ropes; ch. i. 5. multitude of counsellors, assuming that they are wise ones.[c] a "The 'mouth of the wicked,' the channel of impieties, falsehoods, impurities, and innumerable pernicious errors, has caused in all ages, and is still causing, the overthrow of states." — Dav. Thomas.

"Whatever mitigates the woes or increases the happiness of others is a just criterion of goodness, and whatever injures society at large, or any individual in it, is a criterion of iniquity. One should not quarrel with a dog without a reason sufficient to vindicate one through all the courts of morality." — Goldsmith.

"Influence depends less on our activity than on the qualities that lie behind our activities, as the planet attracts, not by its motion, but by its weight."—Thomas Starr King.

Sheridan spoke in his day of a set of "malicious, prating, prudent gossips, both male and female, who murder characters to kill time, and will rob a young fellow of his good name before he has years to know the value of it."

b "Faithfulness is shown not only in doing what a man has been commissioned to do, but in doing it quietly, and without garrulity."—Spk. Com.

c "In our private affairs we shall often find it to our advantage to advise with many. If they agree in their advice, our way will be the more clear; if they differ, we shall hear what is to be said on all sides, and be the better able to determine." —Mat. Henry.

"It is a penalty inflicted by God on a sinful state to give it princes void of counsel (Isa. iii. 4; chap. xv. 22)."—Fausset.

Wisdom the want of states (vs. 14).— This verse implies three facts. I. The people require government. II. The government required must be that of intelligence. III. The necessary intelligence must be reached by consultation.— Thomas.

Multitude of counselors. — Probably one is more struck, on reflection and in reading, with the exceptions to the rule, than with confirmatory examples of it, that in the multitude of counselors there is safety. . . . A modern historian finds in the unlicensed discretion reposed by the Roman Senate in the general, the most efficient aid to the extent of Rome's early conquests, and he points by way of contrast, to the modern republics of Italy, as denying themselves scope for larger conquests by their extreme jealousy of their commanders. Anarchy in Antwerp is the heading of one of Mr. Morley's graphic pages, and a lively picture it offers us of the confusion that ensued when the hydra heads of the multitudinous government were laid together. In Drake's expedition of 1595, there were too many in command, and after losing time in debate which Sir Francis, if alone, would have spent in action, they were obliged to give up the attempt on the Canaries, with some loss. The otherwise unaccountable action of De Witt in 1671 is explained at once when the anarchical constitution of the Dutch republic is remembered — its want of a central authority, and the fact that, to raise money or troops, the consent of a number of petty councils was necessary, in the multitude of whose counselors was anything but safety. "In the multitude of counselors there may be safety," says Alison, "it is in general safety to the counselors, not to the counseled." The quality of the counsel, and the ability of the counselors, are elements of main import in the maxim of the king. — Jacox.

"When speech is given to a soul holy and true, time, and its dome of ages, becomes as a mighty whispering gallery, round which the imprisoned utterance runs, and reverberates forever." — J. Martineau.

"A money-lender — He serves you in the present tense; he lends you in the conditional mood; keeps you in the subjunctive, and ruins you in the future."—Addison.

15. surety, strikes hands, as the sign of entering into a compact. Stuart trans. "an evil man showeth himself as evil when he giveth pledge;" i. e. bec. he does not redeem it. a stranger, perhaps a foreigner, one with whom he has only business relations. smart for it, by the exaction of his bond. is sure, or secure.

Sureties.— The melancholy instances of ruin, in consequence of becoming surety for others, are exceedingly numerous in the East. Against this they have many proverbs and fearful examples; but nothing seems to impart wisdom. Nearly all the Government monopolies, both among native and European rulers, are let to the highest bidders, and as the whole of the money cannot be advanced till a part of the produce be sold, sureties have to be accountable for the amount. But as men generally enter into these speculations in order to better a reduced fortune, an extravagant price is often paid, and ruin is the consequence both to the principal and his surety. This practice of suretyship, however, is also common in the most trifling affairs of life. "Sign your name," is a request preferred by every one who is desirous of obtaining additional security to a petty agreement. In every legal court or magistrate's office may be seen, now and then, a trio entering, thus to become responsible for the engagements of the other. The cause of all this is probably the bad faith which prevails amongst the heathen.— Roberts.

"The purity of woman is her 'hidden strength.' 'She that has that is clad in complete steel.'"

"Who would raise the foolish question whether grace or strength is the more desirable attribute? Each is desirable in its own way; a combination that is the very perfection of character. Strength and beauty are in the house of the Lord."—Parker.

16. gracious woman, prob. intended for personification of grace. A gracious woman is a sensible, God-fearing woman. honour, virtue and character being to her what riches are to men.[a] and strong, etc., better, "Even as the mighty grasp at riches." The two clauses are parallel in form, not in sense, and imply that beauty is more effective than strength, and honor is better than wealth.

a 1 Pet. iii. 1-4.

A contrast.— Here the sexes are put in beautiful apposition: woman is gracious, man is strong. Graciousness dissociated from strength has indeed an influence all its own; strength dissociated from graciousness is mere strength, and is wanting in all those attributes which excite and satisfy the deepest confidences of the world. A woman can work miracles by her graciousness. She knows how to enter the sick chamber noiselessly. She knows how to enter the room without violence, ostentation, or impressiveness, which signifies vanity and display. Woman can speak the gentle word, and look the gracious look, and use the magical touch of friendship and trust, and, in short, can carry her own way without appearing to do so by the very force of tenderness, sympathy, and persuasiveness.— Parker.

"Talk not of deeds of valor, nor of fame,
Nor of thy wealth and worldly greatness boast.
Remember this; though feeble be his frame,
And few his gifts and unextolled his name,
The greatest man is he that loves the most."
—George H. Rowles.

17. merciful man, one of a generous, charitable disposition. "Charity is twice blessed."[a] own soul, i. e. himself; his good deeds ret. to bless him. cruel, as regardless of the wants and sufferings of others. his own flesh, brings on himself retribution.

Matthew Hale and the poor.— It is said of the excellent Lord Chief Justice Hale, that he frequently invited his poor neighbors to dinner, and made them sit at table with himself. If any of them were sick, so that they could not come, he would send provisions to them warm from his own table. He did not confine his bounties to the poor of his own parish, but diffused supplies to the neighboring parishes as occasion required. He always treated the old, the needy, and the sick, with the tenderness and familiarity that became one who considered they were of the same nature with himself, and were reduced to to no other necessities but such as he himself might be brought to.

18, 19. (18) deceitful work, R. V., "earneth deceitful wages," such they will surely prove to the man himself. sure reward, permanent and satisfying return.[b] (19) life, used inclusively of all true and lasting blessings.

The deceitfulness of sin (vs. 18).— We have here — I. Opposite characters II. Opposite practices. III. Opposite results. To the righteous there is — 1. A certain reward; 2. A suitable reward; 3. A satisfying reward; 4. An abiding reward. Advise: — (1) Pause and inquire if such a change has been effected in you; (2) Pray for convincing and converting grace; (3) Persevere through evil and good report.— Zeta in 400 Sks.

The violet sower. — One beautiful spring morning, a little child sat on the stone at his father's door, in the sunshine, playing with a number of small seeds. He threw them about carelessly, until there was only one left. "I will plant this in the earth," said he. So he ran to a bank, and having made a tiny hole, he laid the shining seed within it, and covered it up, raising a little heap of earth above it to mark the spot, that he might return to look at it again. And the spring sunbeams smiled upon the mound where the little seed lay buried, and the gentle dew and refreshing rain moistened it. Thus was it nourished, till at last it opened its smooth case, and spread its clasping fibers round it, and grew, and grew, until two little green leaves passed up above the soil; these soon raised themselves higher, and at length it became a full-grown plant, with two tiny buds, which soon expanded into sweet blue violets. But the child did not see them, for he was far away. When autumn came, these sweet flowers faded, and in their place came two little bags of seed, and as soon as they were ripe, they showered down on the earth a great number of seeds, like the one the little child had planted. While the stern cold winter lasted, these little seeds lay snugly in their bed of earth; but when the mild spring sunshine beamed once more, they too sprang up, spreading their green leaves and opening their graceful flowers beside the parent plant; and every succeeding season there sprang up more violet plants, until the bank was covered with their luxuriant green leaves, and such a number of violets opened their modest flowers that the air was filled with their fragrance, and the passers-by paused to admire the lovely spot; and many took seeds away to plant in their gardens, and a little city child carefully carried a young plant to her humble home, and placed it in a box in her father's window, that it might smile upon her with its sweet blue eyes. Thus years went by. The little boy was now a man in a far-off country, but his heart still loved his childhood's home, and therefore he crossed the seas and visited it again in the sweet spring-time. When he came to the bank of violets, he paused to breathe the delicious perfume; then he remembered how, in his infant play, he had sown the solitary seed. "Can it be," he asked, as he looked in astonishment at the spot, "that all these have sprung from the one I planted?" Then, stooping, he gathered a flower, and as he thoughtfully gazed on its simple beauty exclaimed, "I will never waste a seed again!"

20, 21. (20) froward, in sense of wilful, perverse. upright, steadily waiting on God for counsel and guidance, prepared to follow cheerfully in His way. (21) hand in hand, a fig for combining together, taken from the custom of clasping hands in suretyship. seed . . delivered,[c] not "the posterity of the righteous," but the righteous themselves; comp. "the generation of them th seek Him," Ps. xxiv. 6.

God's anger with the wicked (vs. 20). — To think that God is only "angry with the wicked" is but half a truth, aud half a truth becomes practically a

[a] "The good Samaritan, who bathed the wounds, and provided for the wants of a plundered Jew, obtained a greater profit on the transaction than the sufferer who was saved by his benevolence."— Arnot.

[b] 1 Cor. ix. 11; 2 Cor. ix. 6.

"The ungodly man lives a life of ungodliness and he promises himself some kind of advantage. But it cannot be; he is doomed to disappointment. However much he lies to work his work, the issue of his work will not lie. The earth will not lie concerning what kind of seed is placed in her furrows. If wheat is hidden there she will not disappoint the husbandman by returning him tares — if tares are sown she will render back of what has been entrusted to her care. She will speak the truth about the sowing by giving according to that which she has received."— Preacher's Com.

"By necessity of his condition, every man's life, and every moment of it, is a sowing. The machine is continually moving over the field and shaking; it cannot, even for a moment, be made to stand still, so as not to sow. It is not an open question at all whether I shall sow or not to-day; the only question to be decided is, Shall I sow good seed or bad?"— Arnot.

[c] Ps. xxxvii. 25, 26.

"The true, the beautiful, and the good are one in God, and He can only delight in that which reflects Himself. Hence His delight in the well-beloved Son, and in all who are conformed to His image."—Preacher's Com.

"Men cannot be joined wisely and permanently together unless they are first joined to the living God. Men can only be joined to the living God through the living Christ; He is the vine, men are the branches."—Parker.

lie. To picture our Father in heaven all in shade is to hide half His loveliness, and keep His creatures terrified away. There is another side to His character. —Arnot.

Hand to hand. — A very solemn method of taking an oath in the East is by joining hands, uttering at the same time a curse upon the false swearer. To this the wise man probably alludes. This form of swearing is still observed in Egypt and the vicinity; for when Mr. Bruce was at Shekh Hunner, he entreated the protection of the governor in prosecuting his journey, when the great people who were assembled came, and after joining hands, repeated a kind of prayer about two minutes long, by which they declared themselves and their children accursed, if ever they lifted up their hands against him in the tent, or the field, or the desert, or in case that he or his should fly to them for refuge, if they did not protect them at the risk of their lives. Or, sometimes, when two persons make a contract they bring the palms of their right hands into contact, and raise them to their lips and forehead. At other times they rub the forefingers of their right hands together, repeating the words, "right, right," or "together, together."—Paxton's Illustrations.

a "Nose-rings were fastened in the central division of the nose, and hung down over the mouth: they have been ornaments in common use in the East from the time of the patriarchs down to the present day."—Delitzsch.

22. jewel, better, ring, with reference to the Eastern nose-ring, worn by ladies.[a] swine's snout, fr. this it appears that in ancient Syria swine wore such rings to prevent them from doing mischief. fair woman, of attractive personal appearance. without discretion, lit. one who has turned aside in respect to taste: one who lacks moral sensibility.[b] One of a loose and dissolute conversation. —Henry.

Analogy between gold and beauty. — 1. They are both gifts from God. Whether a man possesses gold by inheritance or as the result of labor it is a gift from God. Beauty is also a gift from God, those who possess it deserve no honor for being beautiful, those who lack it are not to be despised on that account. 2. Both have a certain value. 3. Both may make their possessors worthy of praise or blame. Although neither praise nor blame can be attached to the possession of them, much may be to their use."—Preacher's Com.

Ge. xxiv. 22, 47; Is. iii. 21.

Gold. —

"Money thou bane of bliss, and source of woe, Whence com'st thou, that thou art so fresh and fine?
I know thy parentage is base and low:
Man found thee poor and dirty in a mine.

"Surely thou didst so little contribute
To this great kingdom, which thou now hast got,
That he was fain, when thou wert destitute,
To dig thee out of thy dark cave and grot.

"Then forcing thee, by fire he made thee bright;
Nay, thou hast got the face of man: for we Have with our stamp and seal transferred our right:
Thou art the man, and man but dross to thee.

"Man calleth thee his wealth, who made thee rich,
And while he digs out thee, falls in the ditch."—Herbert.

b "'Without taste;' void of the subtle tact and grace, without which mere beauty is as ill-bestowed as the nose-ring, not on a fair woman's face, but in the snout of an unclean beast."—Spk. Com.

23. desire, or mere wish. Set in contrast with the expectation, or strong confidence, of the wicked, as ch. x. 28. only good, wh., therefore, can only bring to him prosperity and blessing. wrath, that wrath of God wh. surely attends on all self-willed, violent, and wicked ways, however prosperous for the time they may seem.[c] c "This vs. tells us what the desire and expectation of the wicked are, and how they will prove, what they would have, and what they shall have."—Matt. Henry.

Wishes and hopes. — The wishes of the righteous are only good, for God prospers and fulfils them; but the hope of the wicked is extinguished in calamity. I. Wishes and hopes have a certain power to fulfil themselves. II. The regulation of the wishes is an important part of self-discipline. III. To wish and to hope for nothing but the best (in accord with the will of God) is an insurance against disappointment. IV. Selfish hopes lead to unanswered prayers and to bitter chagrins. —Johnson.

Ps. x. 17; lxxiii. 25; Is. xxvi. 8; Ro. ii. 7-11.

Meekness illustrated by the elder tree. — This timber is the softest, and can without difficulty be split, cut, and wrought, and yet experience proves that it does not rot in water. The greater part of the city of Venice stands upon piles of elder, which, sunk in the sea, form the foundation of massive buildings. It is the same with meek hearts. There is no better foundation for important undertakings of public or private utility, than that intelligent modesty which is gentle indeed, and ready to yield as far as a good conscience will allow, but which, nevertheless, lasts and continues stable in the flood of contradiction. — Gottholdt.

24–26. (24) scattereth, in a good sense; makes "a generous distribution of benefactions." The figure is taken from the hand-sower. increaseth, by gaining both temporal and spiritual good.[a] "There is a distribution that enricheth the soul of the distributor." withholdeth . . meet, is sparing, niggardly, and avaricious.[b] R. V., marg. "what is justly due." "Mean parsimony tends only to poverty." poverty, the miser's feeling of poverty: and poverty of God's true blessings, which alone make rich. (25) liberal soul, lit. the soul of blessing. fat,[c] "the sleek, well-filled look of health becomes the figure of prosperity." watereth, lit. he that raineth shall himself become a river.[d] (26) withholdeth corn, in time of famine, etc., to force up the price.[e] selleth it, at a fair price.

Christian liberality (vs. 25). — These words lead us to see — I. The spirit we should possess. 1. A spirit of liberality; 2. A spirit of benevolence. II. The benefits that will accrue to the possessor of it. 1. From the very exercise of the principle itself; 2. From the immediate agency of the Almighty God. Hence we may clearly see — (1) From whence comes that leanness of which many complain; (2) What encouragement we have to proceed in the work before us. — Simeon.

Reward of generosity. — Nearly half a century ago, when a coach ran daily between Glasgow and Greenock, by Paisley, on a forenoon, when a little past Bishopton, a lady in a coach noticed a boy walking barefooted, seemingly tired, and struggling with tender feet. She desired the coachman to take him up, give him a seat, and she would pay for it. When they arrived at the inn in Greenock, she inquired of the boy what was his object in coming there. He said he wished to be a sailor, and hoped some of the captains would engage him. She gave him half-a-crown, wished him success, and charged him to behave well. Twenty years after this, the coach returning to Glasgow in the afternoon on the same road, when near Bishopton, a sea-captain observed an old lady on the road walking very slow, fatigued and weary. He desired the coachman to put her in the coach, as there was an empty seat, and he would pay for her. Immediately after, when changing horses at Bishopton, the passengers were sauntering about, except the captain and old lady, who remained in the coach. The lady thanked him for his kindly feeling towards her, as she was now unable to pay for a seat. He said he had always sympathy for weary pedestrians, since he himself was in that state when a boy, twenty years ago, near this very place, when a tender-hearted lady ordered the coachman to take him up and paid for his seat. "Well do I remember that incident," said she; "I am that lady, but my lot in life has changed. I was then independent; now I am reduced to poverty by the doings of a prodigal son." "How happy am I," said the captain, "that I have been successful in my enterprises, and am returning home to live on my fortune; and from this day I shall bind myself and heirs to supply you with twenty-five pounds per annum till your death." — Whitecross.

27. diligently, or early in the morning: the Eastern sign of diligence was rising early and setting about a thing earnestly. procureth, better, "will seek for [God's] favor." This is the highest good; therefore the wise seeker will seek for this. — Stuart. favour, from God.[f] mischief, or the injury of others. it, viz., that wh. he desires and seeks for others.[g]

Good and evil (vs. 27). — I. As objects of pursuit. 1. Some pursue good; 2. Some pursue evil. II. As sources of destiny. These pursuits bring different results to the soul. 1. The one procureth favor; 2. The other disfavor. — Thomas.

Diligence. — A friend of mine, says Mr. Gurney, one day inquired of the then Lord Chancellor how he managed to get through so much business. "Oh," said his lordship, "I have three rules: the first is, I am a whole man to one thing at a time; the second is, I never lose a passing opportunity of doing anything that can be done; and the third is, I never entrust to other people what I ought to do myself."

"But every man is with God so good as he desires to be. They are written in the book of life that do what they can, though they cannot do as they would." — Trapp.

a "John Howard, when he grew sad about his piety, put on his hat and went about among the poor. He came back a gainer." — Miller.

b "Avarice is an anomaly in the universe; all else gives out what it receives, but as a monster this clutches and retains." — Dav. Thomas.

c Pr. xiii. 4; xxviii. 25.

d "The water that falls in refreshing and fertilizing irrigation is not lost, but becomes a fair stream, fringed with flowers, and overhung with trees. So the bounty of the liberal man, wh. rains down blessings, will flow on forever in a beautiful river." — Wordsworth.

e Am. viii. 4–6.

"Cast forth thy act, thy word, into the ever-living, ever-working universe; it is a seed-grain that cannot die; unnoticed today, it will be found flourishing as a banyan grove, perhaps, alas, as a hemlock forest, after a thousand years." — Carlyle.

f "The meaning is, that he who desires good, absolutely for its own sake, is also unconsciously striving after the favor which attends goodness." — Spk. Com.

g Ps. vii. 14–16.

"I go at what I am about as if there was nothing else in the world for the time being. That is the secret of all hard-working men." — Charles Kingsley.

28. trusteth . . riches, wealth itself is not an evil, but trust in wealth rather than in God is the very essence of evil.[a] branch, or leaf.[b] "A fresh green leaf on a tree, in contrast with the withered falling leaf, to wh. the fool should rather be compared who trusts in his riches." — Zöckler.

Trusting in riches (vs. 28). — I. Here is a common tendency. Wealth as an object of trust — 1. Is spiritually unsatisfying; 2. Necessarily evanescent. II. Here is a terrible catastrophe. Shall fall! 1. Whence? 2. Whither? 3. When? 4. Why? — Thomas.

Riches unsatisfying. — I have read of one that, upon his dying bed, called for his bags, and laid a bag of gold to his heart, and then cried out, "Take it away, it will not do, it will not do!" There are things that earthly riches cannot do. They can never satisfy Divine justice, nor pacify Divine wrath, nor quiet a guilty conscience. And till these things are done, the man is undone. — Brooks. — Riches dangerous. — As sheep that go in fat pastures come sooner to the slaughter-house than those which are kept upon the bare common: so, likewise, rich men, who are pampered with the wealth of this world, sooner forsake God, and therefore are sooner forsaken of God than others. — Cawdray.

29. troubleth, with niggardly and worrying ways: by his greediness for gain. the wind, used as the type of disappointment and dissatisfaction. No gains are of any value if to win them we sacrifice the peace and joy of our home.[c] the fool, i. e. this ill-tempered destroyer of the home. servant, he becomes, as a slave, dependent on those who wisely manage household economies.

Family life (vs. 29). — The words imply three things. I. That peace should be the grand aim of all the members of the domestic circle. II. That there are some members who break the peace of their domestic circle. III. That those who break the peace of their domestic circle are fools. 1. They get no good by it; 2. They get degradation by it. — Thomas.

A home-troubler. — "I called," said a minister, "some time ago to see a mother. She was in distress; she not only wept, but wept aloud. 'What is the matter?' I inquired. 'O, my child,' and she wept again — 'O, my child is committed to prison,' and again she wept, — 'O, my child is just committed to prison, and I fear he will never, never return to his father's house;' and she wept again, and with all my firmness I could not forbear weeping too. I was afraid to ask the cause. I did not need, for she said, 'O that theatre! he was a virtuous, kind youth, till that theatre proved his ruin.' This was her testimony — it was the young man's also." "One theatre," said a learned and observant judge, "destroys more souls than fifty churches can save."— Whitecross.

30, 31. (30) fruit, that wh. the righteous man says and does; the result of his moral integrity.[d] tree of life, a growth fr. wh. there springs forth life for many. winneth, etc., better, "A wise man winneth souls."[e] (31) recompensed, with just Divine recognition of their failings and sins. "The righteous is punished for his lesser sins, or as a discipline; much more the wicked."[f]

A word to winners of souls (vs. 30). — I. He has a blessing in the winning. 1. The best way to keep our own souls in health is to seek those of others; 2. The best way to benefit our brethren is to seek souls. II. He has a blessing in the won. 1. Every soul we win for Christ is a token of His favor; 2. Causes, or should cause, more watchfulness; 3. Is an additional helper for us. III. He has a blessing stored up in heaven. 1. Exalted position — "shine as the stars;" 2. Perpetual preferment — "for ever and ever;" 3. Unbounded delight." — Stems and Twigs.

Winning souls. — The following is language held by a colporteur of the American Tract Society in Florida: A colporteur must count the cost, admonished by Him who came to seek and to save that which was lost. Bodily strength and vigor of health are prerequisites. He must be willing to abide with the poorest and most ignorant of our fellow-men, and be content with the humblest fare; cheerfully endure cold and heat, hunger and thirst, labor and fatigue, if souls may be benefited and the kingdom of our Redeemer promoted. Above all, he needs an entire reliance on the Divine aid and guidance, and must have his own heart subdued by the Spirit of God. Though I have sunk in the bogs, and have extricated myself only by exces-

a Pr. x. 15; Ps. xlix. 6; 1 Ti. vi. 17.

b Ps. i. 3; xcii. 12; Je. xvii. 8.

"When those who take root in the world wither, those that are grafted into Christ and partake of His root and fatness shall be fruitful and flourishing."— Matt. Henry.

"Be not proud of riches, but afraid of them, lest they be as silver bars to cross the way to heaven."—Mason.

c "Home is the one place where hearts are sure of each other. It is the place of confidence. It is the place where we tear off that mask of guarded and suspicious coldness wh. the world forces us to wear in self-defense, and where we pour out the unreserved communications of full and confiding hearts." — F. W. Robertson.

"The man who slams the door on his own home needn't sing about climbing the golden stairs to heaven." — C. E. World.

d "The fruit of a life is the involuntary and regular expression of what the man is in heart and soul." — Dav. Thomas.

e Da. xii 3; Ja. v. 19, 20; 1 Cor. ix. 19, 22, 23.

f 1 Pe. iv. 18.

"God would have us read our sins in our judgments, that we might both repent of our sins and give glory to His justice." — Bp. Hall.

"Only He who made the human heart knows how to satisfy the human heart. That nothing can satisfy the human heart but the living God, in some sive labor; have broken down in the midst of a difficult stream, in the sickly and hot season, and waded out with my boxes of books; have been lost two days in the woods without food for myself or horse; have lain in the wild forest, far from any habitation, while the storm was raging about me, or only the howling of wolves and of other wild beasts was heard; yet these trials of hunger, thirst, and exposure are of little account if I can but win souls to Christ." — Cheever. — The soul can only be won to God by the same kind of power as it was won from God, viz., by that of persuasion. If the tempter had tried force he would have failed with our first parents. He knew human nature too well to attempt the use of such means. Force is of no avail to bring about a friendship, and the winning of a soul is bringing about a friendship between man and God. — Preachers' Com.

CHAPTER THE TWELFTH.

1. instruction, in the wider sense of discipline, wh. comes through the providences and experiences of life. knowledge, the practical knowledge that enables a man to guide his life aright. reproof, wh. comes so surely in the providential dealings of God. brutish, incapable of being influenced by reason and experience.[a] Such conduct is unworthy of one who is possessed of an immortal soul and infinite capacity for progress and improvement.

Good and evil (vs. 1). — Good and evil are presented in three aspects. I. In relation to intelligence. 1. The good loves instruction: 2. The evil hates intelligence. II. In relation to Divine judgment. 1. The good secures the favor of God; 2. The evil incurs condemnation. III. In relation to their standing. 1. The evil have no stability; 2. The good are firmly established. — Thomas.

Reproof. — It was a maxim of Bishop Griswold — "When censured or accused, to correct — not justify — my error." A certain minister with more zeal than discretion, once became impressed with the thought that the bishop was a mere formalist in religion, and that it was his duty to go and warn him of the danger, and exhort him to "flee from the wrath to come." Accordingly he called upon the bishop, very solemnly made known his errand, and forthwith entered upon his reproof. The bishop listened in silence till his visitor had closed a severely denunciatory exhortation, and then in substance replied as follows: "My dear friend, I do not wonder that they who witness the inconsistency of my daily conduct, and see how poorly I adorn the doctrine of God my Saviour, should think I have no religion. I often fear for myself that such is the case, and feel very grateful to you for giving me this warning." The reply was made with such evidently unaffected humility, and with such deep sincerity, that if an audible voice from heaven had attested the genuineness of his Christian character, it could not more effectually have silenced his kindly-intending but misjudging censor, or more completely disabused him of his false impressions. He immediately acknowledged his error, begged the bishop's pardon, and ever afterwards looked upon him as one of the distinguished lights of the Christian world. — Episc. Record.

2, 3. (2) goodman, i. e., pure, morally good. obtaineth, or draws out. man . . devices. It means "the man of plots;" one whose thoughts are perverse and artful. (3) established, set firm. The apparent prosperity of the wicked became a sore puzzle oftentimes to the righteous, so they needed such an assurance as this. root, representing the righteous as a firmly established tree.[b] Comp. our Lord's fig. Matt. vii. 24–27.

Primary truths. — I. The wisdom of submission, the folly of resistance, to reproof. As self-knowledge is the most precious and indispensable, and as it comes to us by chastisement, to be willing and anxious to know our faults, is the mark of true wisdom. To fret at reproof, to be angry with the counselor, to hate the revealing light, is the worst folly and stupidity. II. The favor and the disfavor of God are discriminating. The good reap His good will; the crafty and malicious are exposed to His condemnation. III. Moral stability and instability. Wickedness gives no firm foundation. The bad man is insecure, as a tottering wall or a leaning fence. The good man is like the oak, firmly and widely rooted, which may defy a thousand blasts and storms. — Johnson.

form, is a proof that man was made in the image and likeness of God."—Parker.

"Loving thoughtfulness can't be hired at the employment agency."—C. E. World.

"Ignorance is the curse of God, Knowledge the wing with which we fly to heaven." — Shakespeare.

a "The difference bet. man and brute lies chiefly in the capacity of the former for progress and improvement, and that capacity depends upon his willing uess to submit to discipline and education." — Spk. Com.

Ps. xlix. 10; lxxiii. 22; xcii. 6; Pr. xxx. 2.

"Those that desire to live in loose families and societies, where they may be under no check, that stifle the convictions of their own consciences, and count those their enemies who tell them the truth, are the brutish here meant." — Matt. Henry.

"It is the property of all true knowledge, especially spiritual, to enlarge the soul by filling it; to enlarge it without swelling it; to make it more capable, and more earnest to know, the more it knows." — Bp. Sprat.

b Ps. 1. 3; xv. 5; Je. xvii. 8.

"'Tis Nature's law that none, the meanest of created things, of forms created the most vile and brute, the dullest or most noxious, should exist divorced from good — a spirit and pulse of good, a life and soul to every mode of being inseparately linked." — Wordsworth.

"A man, being wicked, how shall he expect anything, except that he shall be disturbed? While the saint, though 'shaken' in leaf and bough, and storm-tossed, and, perhaps, broken in his branches, yet 'shall not be shaken' in his 'root.'"—Miller.

Guided by integrity. — A company of boys in ——— street, Boston, one day after school, were engaged in snowballing. William had made a good hard snowball. In throwing it he "put in too much powder," as the boys say — he threw it too hard — and it went further than he intended, right through a parlor window. All the boys shouted: "There, you'll catch it now. Run, Bill, run!" They then took to their heels. But the brave William straightened up and looked sober, as he said, "I shall not run." He then started directly for the house where the window had been broken. He rang at the door, acknowledged what he had done, and expressed his regret. He then gave his name, and the name of his father, and his father's place of business, and said the injury should be repaired. — Am. Mag.

4. virtuous woman, not merely a chaste woman, but one in whom is strength of character: a woman of power;[a] a capable woman; one in whom her husband can fully trust. crown, or garland: the emblem of honor and renown, of gladness and of joy. Her care and wise ruling in the house crowns him with prosperity and happiness. maketh ashamed, R. V., marg. "doeth shamefully," by incompetency or self-indulgence. rottenness, etc.[b] Such a wife poisons her husband's life, deprives him of strength and vigor, saps his very existence.

The queen of the household (vs. 4). — In that — I. She exercises a control over him — crown the insignia of rule. II. She confers a dignity upon him — a crown is a dignity. 1. Her excellence justifies his choice: 2. Her management enriches his exchequer; 3. Her influence exalts his character. — Thomas.

A virtuous woman is a source of honor to her husband; a vicious one causes him disgrace.

The household queen.—

Eyes not down-dropp'd, nor over bright, but fed
With the clear-pointed flame of chastity:
. . Locks not wide dispread,
Madonna-wise, on either side her head;
Sweet lips, whereon perpetually did reign
The summer calm of golden charity,
Were fixed shadows of thy fixed mood,
Revered Isabel, the crown and head,
The stately flower of female fortitude,
Of perfect wifehood and pure lowlihood.
. . . . . .
A courage to endure and to obey —
A hate of gossip parlance, and of sway,
Crown'd Isabel, through all her placid life,
The queen of marriage — a most perfect wife.— Tennyson.

"The very first of human life must spring from woman's breast; your first small words are taught you from her lips; your first tears quench'd by her, and your last sighs too often breathed out in a woman's hearing, when men have shrunk from the ignoble care of watching the last hour of him who led them."—Lord Byron.

Woman's voice.—

Not in the swaying of the summer trees,
When evening breezes sing their vesper hymn
Not in the minstrel's mighty symphonies,
Nor ripples breaking on the river's brim,
Is earth's best music; these may have awhile
High thoughts in happy hearts, and carking cares beguile.

But even as the swallow's silken wings,
Skimming the water of the sleeping lake,
Stir the still silver with a hundred rings —
So doth one sound the sleeping spirit wake
To brave the danger, and to bear the harm —
A low and gentle voice — dear woman's chiefest charm.

"Oh, woman! that some one of you will take an everlasting pen into your hands, and grave in paper (which the writ shall make more lasting than the marble monuments) your matchless virtues to posterities; which the defective race of envious man strives to conceal."— Beaumont and Fletcher.

An excellent thing it is! and ever lent
To truth and love, and meekness; they who own
This gift, by the all-gracious Giver sent,
Ever by quiet step and smile are known;
By kind eyes that have wept, hearts that have sorrow'd —
By patience never tired, from their own trials borrow'd.

An excellent thing it is when first in gladness
A mother looks into her infant's eyes —

[a] Ru. iii. 11; Pr. xxxi. 16.

[b] "Lit. a worm eating, i. e. a ruin inwardly undermining and slowly destroying." — O. Zöckler.

Smiles to its smiles, and saddens to its sadness —
Pales at its paleness, sorrows at its cries;
Its food and sleep, and smiles, and little joys —
All these come ever blent with one low gentle voice

An excellent thing it is when life is leaving — Leaving with gloom and gladness, joys and cares —
The strong heart failing, and the high soul grieving
With strangest thoughts, and wild unwonted fears·
Then, then a woman's low soft sympathy
Comes like an angel's voice to teach us how to die.

But a most excellent thing it is in youth,
When the fond lover hears the loved one's tone,
That fears, but longs, to syllable the truth —
How their two hearts are one, and she his own:
It makes sweet human music — Oh! the spells
That haunt the trembling tale a bright-eyed maiden tells! — Arnold.

"Ill-temper in woman.—Fie, fie! unknit that threat'ning unkind brow; and dart not scornful glances from those eyes, to wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor; it blots thy beauty, as frosts bite the meads; confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake fair buds; and in no sense is meet, or amiable." — Shakespeare.

"As good say nothing, as nothing to the purpose." — Philip Henry.

5–7. (5) thoughts, or purposes.[a] right, aim at simple justice and righteousness. "Habits of good and evil reach beyond the region of outward act to that of impulse and violation." — Spk. Com. counsels, or deliberate plans, contrasted with casual thoughts of the righteous. deceit, not truth, or righteousness, or charity. (6) for blood, "are a-lying in wait." — Stuart. The wicked by their lies, slanders, false accusations, endanger men's lives, 1 Ki. xxi. 13. deliver them, i. e. the innocent whose blood the wicked seek. (7) overthrown, "when the wicked are overturned." — Stuart. The notion is scarcely of an overthrow. The Vulgate has, verte impios; i. e. change them a little from their previous state, let them suffer a blow from any cause or of any degree, and they succumb; they have no power of resistance. What the stroke is, or whence it comes, is not expressed; it may be the just judgment of God — temptation, trouble, sickness — but whatever it is, they cannot withstand it as the righteous do. — Pul. Com. Ps. xxxvii. 34–36.

Moral contrasts (vss. 5–7). — I. Thought. If the thought of the righteous is right, his words and actions will correspond. If the counsels of the wicked are deceit, what must his thought have been? II. Word. The deceitful words of wickedness are to lure men to destruction, but the plain and honest speech of truth is to extricate men from the snare of the wicked. III. Destiny. The wicked are overthrown in position and in reputation with man and God, while the righteous will be secure.

A Sunday scholar. — Little Jane was a Sunday scholar whom every one of her Christian friends loved. Whatever seat was vacant at nine o'clock on a Sunday morning, hers was always filled. She was so poor that potatoes and bread constituted her only sustenance, while she was the victim of a severe and wasting ague. She called on her teacher one Monday, who saw traces of disease, hunger, and exhaustion in her expressive countenance, and forced some nutritious food upon her. Jane retired into a corner, and hastily ate one half of this opportune luxury; the other half was stealthily committed to her empty pocket. The action did not escape the keen eye of her teacher. "Jane, my dear," said the teacher, "what are you saving it for? I am sure you can eat it all." The little invalid looked confused, as she answered, "It is for my brother Tommy; he has got the ague too." — R. T. S.

"Upon the regulation of our thoughts depends the regulation of our lives. To think well is the way to act rightly." — Paley.

"Thoughts are the most wonderful things in connection with human life. They are the factors of character, and the primal forces of history. By thought man builds up his own world, and it is ever to him the realest world." — Dav. Thomas.

"So spake the cherub and his grave rebuke, severe in youthful beauty, added grace invincible: abash'd the devil stood, and felt how awful goodness is." — Milton.

"He Fails never; if he cannot work
by us,
He will work over us."
— Mrs Browning.

8, 9. (8) wisdom, a man who gives practical proof of wisdom by life and character, whose words and actions show that he is actuated by high views, is praised and acknowledged by all. perverse heart, lit. the crooked in heart. "The perverse man, who does not see things as they are, and therefore acts perversely and injudiciously." — Hitzig. be despised, or come to shame. (9) hath a servant, better, "is a servant to himself." "It is wiser to look after one's own business and provide for one's own necessities, even if thereby he meets with contempt and detraction, than to be in real want, and all the time assuming the airs of a rich and prosperous man." honoureth himself, with the foolish idea that labor is ignoble, and so lets his hands hang idle.[b]

Honoreth himself. — "I have read," says Thomas Adams, "of Menecrates, a physician that would needs be counted a god, and took no other fee of his "Better is he that laboreth, and aboundeth in all things, than he that boasteth himself and wanteth bread." — Wordsworth.

"Respectable mediocrity is better than boastful poverty." — Spk. Com.

patients than their vow to worship him. Dionysius Syracusanus, hearing of this, invited him to a banquet, and, to honor him according to his desire, set before him nothing but a censer of frankincense, with the smoke whereof he was feasted till he starved, while others fed on good meat." Such smoke as this is all the return such a man as the one pictured in this proverb will get for starving himself, and for sinning against his own body, against society, and against God.— Preacher's Com. Power of knowledge and force of example. —One day, in the year 1814, a workman hurried into Stephenson's cottage with the startling information that the deepest main of the colliery was on fire! He immediately hastened to the pit-head, about a hundred yards off, whither the women and children of the colliery were running, with wildness and terror depicted in every face. In a commanding voice Stephenson ordered the engineman to lower him down the shaft in the corve. There was danger, it might be death, before him, but he must go. He was soon at the bottom, and in the midst of the men, who were paralyzed at the danger which threatened the lives of all in the pit. Leaping from the corve on its touching the ground, he called out, "Are there six men among you who have the courage to follow me? If so, come, and we will put the fire out." The Killingworth pitmen had the most perfect confidence in their engine-wright, and they readily volunteered to follow him. Silence succeeded the frantic tumult of the previous minute, and the men set to work with a will. In every mine, bricks, mortar, and tools enough are at hand, and by Stephenson's direction the materials were forthwith carried to the required spot, where, in a very short time, a wall was raised at the entrance to the main, he himself taking the most active part in the work. The atmospheric air was by this means excluded, the fire was extinguished, most of the people in the pit were saved from death, and the mine was preserved.— Smiles' Life of Stephenson.

"That man is to be accounted poor, of whatever rank he be, and suffers the pains of poverty, whose expenses exceed his resources; and no man is, properly speaking, poor but he." — Paley.

"Bad company is like a nail driven into a post, which after the first and second blow, may be drawn with little difficulty; but being once driven up to the head, the pincers cannot take hold to draw it out, but which can only be done by the destruction of the wood."— Augustine.

"The tender mercies of the wicked are cruel even to men." — Wordsworth.

10. regardeth, lit. "knoweth." "All true sympathy and care must grow out of knowledge. The righteous man tries to know the feelings and life even of the brute beast, and so comes to care for it."[a] — Spk. Com. his beast, esp. the animal that in any way renders him service.[b] tender mercies, or bowels. The reference is prob. to the action of the wicked towards their fellow-men; and the contrast intended may be thus expressed: "The righteous more regards a beast than the wicked a man."— Fausset.

Duty to animals (vs. 10).—I. Consider the relation of man to the lower creatures. He is their lord, ruler — not torturer. They are to minister to his need, not to the violence of his passions or vicious curiosity. A word on vivisection. II. Out of this consideration will grow a proper regard for the life of dumb creatures. Animals kept for use will be cared for, properly fed, not overtasked. The enforced confinement of pet animals should be compensated by kind treatment. III. A proper regard for the lower animals would very much affect what is called sport. Christian legislation has already abolished many of the pastimes that involved cruelty to animals, and inscribed on the statute books laws against such cruelty. IV. Disregard is the evidence of a brutal mind, and degrades man to the level of beasts of prey.

Cruel drivers.— He very often mingled with affairs in the street as he passed along. One day, when he saw a man beating his horse brutally, he stepped up to him and said very seriously, "Dost thou know that some people think men change into animals when they die?" The stranger's attention was arrested by such an unexpected question, and he answered that he never was acquainted with anybody who had that belief. "But some people do believe it," rejoined Friend Hopper; "and they also believe that animals may become men. Now I am thinking if thou shouldst ever be a horse, and that horse should ever be a man with such a temper as thine, the chance is thou will get some cruel beatings." Having thus changed the current of his angry mood, he proceeded to expostulate with him in a friendly way, and the poor beast was reprieved, for that time at least.— Life of I. T. Hopper.

a Ge. xxxiii. 13, 14.

b "God put all under the dominion of man; some to serve him in one way, and some in another; some to charm his eye with their beauty, others to delight his ear with their music; some to supply him with food, others with clothing; some to save his own muscular strength in doing his work, and others to bear him about."-Dav. Thomas.

"The tender mercies of the wicked are when base and guilty men are spared that should be smitten with the sword of justice. This pity, by granting impunity, arms and sends forth against innocent men the whole army of evil-doers." — Lord Bacon.

11. tilleth his land, with foresight and diligence. satisfied, with the sure rewards of his toil. vain persons, idle and prodigal men.[c] "Idleness leads to worse evil than that of hunger."

Industry and idleness (vs. 11).—I. Every one has something, if not land, that he may till. II. The industrious toiler will have at least bread. III. The results of honest toil will be satisfying. IV. If one has understanding he will not follow the empty, but will rather seek to lead them in a more excellent way.

c Man should not eat of honey like a drone from other's labors.

"In a moral point of view the life of the agriculturist is the most pure and holy of any class

Earl of Chatham. — The celebrated Earl of Chatham performed an amount of business, even minute, which filled common improvers of time with astonishment. He knew not merely the great outlines of public business, the policy and intrigues of foreign courts, but his eye was on every part of the British dominions, and scarcely a man could move without the knowledge of the man and of his object. A friend one day called on him when premier of England, and found him down on his hands and knees, playing at marbles with his little boy, and complaining bitterly that the rogue would not play fair, gaily adding, "that he must have been corrupted by the example of the French." The friend wished to mention a suspicious-looking stranger, who for some time had taken up lodgings in London. Was he a spy, or merely a private gentleman? Chatham went to his drawer, and took out some scores of small portraits, and holding up one which he had selected, asked, "Is that the man?" "Yes, the very person." "Oh! I have had my eye on him from the moment he stepped on shore." All this was accomplished by a rigid observance of time, never suffering a moment to pass without pressing it into service.

12, 13. (12) desireth the net, a difficult expression. "The wicked desireth the spoil of evil doers." — Zöckler. "The wicked longs for the prey of evil men." — Miller. The marg. gives another word for net, viz., fortress, "The wicked seeks the protection of evil men." — Pul. Com. root, the part wh. is fixed and stable; the firm principles and rootings in righteousness. yieldeth fruit, "shall be firm." — Stuart. (13) is snared, is himself snared by the evil speaking with wh. he seeks to overthrow others. Lies are the language of the crafty. come out of, if he may get into trouble, truth, integrity, and uprightness will insure deliverance sooner or later.

Fruitfulness (vs. 12). — 1. The forms of godly fruitfulness are these. (1) All excellency of spirit; (2) All beauty and worthiness of life, the presence of that which is pleasing in the sight of God and admirable in the sight of man; (3) all earnest endeavor to do good, the patient, persevering effort to instil the thoughts of Christ into the minds of men, to awaken their slumbering consciences, to lift up their lives, to ennoble their character, to enlarge their destiny. 2. The source and the security of such fruitfulness are: (1) Union with the living Vine; (2) Abiding in Him; (3) The wise and kind discipline of the Divine Husbandman. — Pul. Com.

"The wicked seek their good from without; the righteous have it within, their own root, deep and firmly sunk, supplying it."—Fausset.

"The meaning is, the wicked desire to be as apt in all the stratagems by wh advantage is taken of others as the most cunning of evil men." — Dav. Thomas.

"The net of evil men they run into with such a blind infatuation, that it seems as if they were in love with their own destruction." —Spk. Com.

14. fruit of his mouth, i. e. rational and benevolent discourse. recompence, etc., retributive law surely governs the universe.[a] hands, a man's works are the fruit of his hands, as his words are the fruit of his lips. Both good words and good works return upon a man in blessings.

Retributions of lip and life (vs. 14). — I. The retributions of the lip. Good speech is — 1. Sincere; 2. Truthful; 3. Benevolent. Such speech satisfies — (1) In its action on one's own mind; (2) In the effect produced on others; (3) In the conscious approbation of God. II. The retributions of the life. This is inevitable — 1. From the law of causation; 2. From the law of conscience; 3. From the law of righteousness. — Thomas.

Reward of benevolence sometimes immediate. — Occasionally a benevolent action wrought in faith brings with it an instantaneous recompense in kind; therein Providence is seen as smiling upon the deed. The late John Andrew Jones, a poor Baptist minister, whilst walking in Cheapside, was appealed to by some one he knew for help. He had but a shilling in the world, and poised it in his mind to give or not to give. The greater distress of his acquaintance prevailed, and he gave his all, walking away with a sweet remembrance of the promise, "He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord, and that which he hath given, will He pay him again." He had not gone a hundred yards further before he met a gentleman who said, "Ah, Mr. Jones, I am glad to see you. I have had this sovereign in my waistcoat pocket this week past for some poor minister, and you may as well have it." Mr. Jones was wont to add, when telling the story, "If I had not stopped to give relief I should have missed the gentleman and the sovereign too." — Spurgeon.

"Now, as good words, so good works shall be rewarded. For the recompense of a man's hands shall reward him; not only shall the wicked be plagued for their evil doing, but the godly shall be blessed for their well-doing." — Muffett.

"The kindness of some is too much like an echo; it returns exactly the counterpart of what it receives, and neither more nor less." — G. S. Bowes.

15, 16. (15) fool, here the self-willed as well as the thoughtless. right . . eyes, i. e. he takes no advice, but with self-confidence follows on his own wilful way.[b] counsel, from those who have wisdom and experience.[c] The wise man is ever a willing listener to wise counsels. "He is a fool that is governed by his eye, and not by his conscience. He is wise whose ear is always open to good advice."—Henry. (16) presently, very soon; because he has not character and self-command enough to restrain his wrath. covereth shame, R. V., "concealeth shame," or hasty anger that might bring shame.[a]

[a] Ga. vi. 7, 8; Ro. ii. 6.

[b] He who knows nothing doubts nothing.

[c] "The first step in knowledge is to know that we are ignorant." — Cecil.

The way of the fool (vs. 15).—I. Right in his own eyes, because, being a fool, he is ignorant of better ways. II. Being a fool he is too proud to acknowledge what he may see to be good in the ways of others. III. Although right in his own eyes, it is wrong in the sight of others,—the good and wise, and God. Anoint thine eyes with eye-salve.

A parable of folly.—Hazael, the son of an Eastern prince, had been educated in the valley of the wise men, and had passed there the days of his boyhood. Then his father sent him to Persia to finish his education, and to learn the ways and manners of men. Perfect liberty was granted to the youth; but Serujah, his old master, secretly watched the life and doings of the prince. When he arrived in Persia, he was led away by the pleasures of the capital and the turmoil of luxurious life; so that he forgot his destination, and thoughtlessly gave up his heart to pleasure: he remembered no longer his royal calling. When he was one day walking in the pleasure-gardens of Ispahan, Serujah passed him in the garb of a pilgrim, having a staff in his right hand. But Hazael knew Serujah, and asked him, "Whence comest thou, and whither goest thou?" Serujah answered, and said, "I know not." Then the youth marveled, and said, "Hast thou left thy home, and dost thou travel abroad not knowing whither?" Serujah answered, "I have forgotten it: I walk to and fro; and the path which seems to me the widest and most pleasant, that choose I." "And whither will such bootless wanderings lead thee?" asked the astonished youth. Serujah answered, "I know not: why should I care?" Then Hazael turned to those who stood around him, and said, "This man was the teacher of my youth, and full of wisdom; but, behold! he has grown foolish, and lacks understanding. Alas! how is he changed, and become like another being!" Then Serujah threw down his wallet, and went to the youth, and said, "Thou sayest it, Hazael, my life has changed like thine. Formerly, I was thy guide, and thou didst follow me in the way which I showed thee. But now I have ceased to be thy guide; I have begun to follow thee. Behold my wandering! wherein I lose sight of the way, and the goal is like thine: reason has departed from thee, even as it has quitted me. Who is the more foolish, thou or I? and which of us is wandering in the worse path?" Thus said Serujah. Then Hazael acknowledged his trangression, and returned to the way of wisdom which Serujah had taught him.—Krummacher.

17—19. (17) truth, strict absolute truth, without concealment or deception. The point in this verse is the "inseparable union bet. truth and justice. The end does not justify the means, and only he who breathes and utters truth makes the righteous cause clear."—Spk. Com. false witness, showeth forth deceit, exhibits his true character, which is fraud, treachery and wrongdoing. (18) piercings, etc.,[b] Ps. lvii. 4; lix. 7. Inconsiderate and inappropriate words are like knife-thrusts, persons feel cut and wounded by them. health, or bringeth healing. Wounding thrusts, and tender healings are forcibly contrasted. (19) for ever, it will abide all testing. for a moment, lit. till I wink again; "unto old age no lie doth ever live."

Truth unchanging.—1. It is valid, abiding, permanent in value (vs. 19). Much in our knowledge is subject to the laws of change and growth. We grow out of the old and into the new. But the simple sentiments of piety and duty common to all good men are capable of no change, no decay. Of them all the good man will ever say, "So was it when I was a boy; so is it now I am a man; so let it be when I grow old!" 2. Joy, peace, and eternal safety are the portion of the wise and just (vss. 20, 21). Joy in the heart, peace in the home and amongst neighbors, safety here and hereafter. Translated into the language of the gospel, "Glory, honor, immortality, and eternal life!' For in one word, he enjoys the favor of his God, and this contains all things.—Pul. Com.

A lying tongue.—A lying or even a babbling tongue can pierce a much more vital organization than flesh and blood—it can enter the human spirit, and hurt it in its most sensitive part; or by slander it can destroy all the joy of a man's earthly life. And as a sword can in a moment sever the spirit a "He is slow to denounce his insulters."—Fausset.

When Dr. Swift was arguing one day, with great coolness, with a gentleman who had become exceedingly warm in the dispute, one of the company asked him how he could keep his temper so well. "The reason is," replied the Dean, "I have truth on my side."

"Command thyself in chief. He life's war knows Whom all his passions follow as he goes."
—George Herbert.

"The greatest of fools is he who imposes on himself, and in his greatest concern thinks certainly he knows that which he has least studied, and of which he is most profoundly ignorant."—Shaftesbury.

"Surely he is not a fool that hath unwise thoughts, but he that utters them."—Bp. Hall.

b "The edge of a sword is called its mouth in Heb. (Ex. xvii. 13; Nu. xxi. 24.) The tongue of the wise is contrasted with the mouth of the sword brandished by the slanderer."—Wordsworth.

"In nature we have a two-fold exhibition of power. The hurricane comes and breaks the branches of the tree, and strips off its leaves; but a more beneficent power clothes it again with beauty. So the tongue of a fool strips a man of what made life beautiful to him—takes away his

and the body of a man, and work such ruin and misery as can never be done away with, so a lying tongue may by one word, or one conversation, do mischief that can never be undone. The sword of steel can divide human friends locally; but it cannot sever their love; it tends rather to increase and brighten the flame; but a word of slander may do all this, and estrange those who were bound in the tenderest ties, until the God of Truth shall bring the truth to light. Though the lying tongue is comparatively "but for a moment," yet in a moment it can deal a thrust that will last as long as life. It can open a wound whence will flow out all the joy of life, as the heart's blood flows from a mortally wounded man. — Hom. Com.

good name, or breaks bonds of close friendship — but wise and kind words have a healing power in them — they help to cheer the wounded spirit, and enable the bowed head to lift itself again."— Preacher's Com.

20, 21. (20) in the heart, it is no surface matter. They are corrupt at the root. imagine, R. V., "devise," i. e. give evil counsel. joy, at heart. Their counsels of peace make their neighbors glad. (21) no evil,[a] R. V., "mischief;" no unmitigated or unsanctified evil; nothing worthless to him. mischief, R. V., "evil," calamity and distress.

Immunity from evil (vs. 21). — I. This seems not to be true; the same event happeneth alike to all; the best of men sometimes suffer. II. But it is true, it will be remembered, that because he is a just man he will regard as good for him that which to others seems evil; for him the curse is turned into a blessing — for him poverty and sickness, etc., are blessings in disguise.

No evil. — It shall not hurt his better part, that which is the man himself — his spiritual nature, his moral character. The storms that cannot uproot a tree only make it take deeper root-hold, and so add to its strength. If it break some of the branches it makes it more fit to weather another tempest. So all the trials of the just man tend to strengthen his character by causing him to lay a firmer hold upon the things that are unseen and eternal. — Hom. Com.

"Affliction then is ours;
We are the trees whom shaking fastens more,
While blustering winds destroy the wanton bowers,
And ruffle all their curious knots and store." — Herbert.

a Ps. xci. 10.

"Look how the scourging and beating of a garment with a stick drives out the moths and the dust; so doth affliction corruptions from the heart; and there is no hurt in that; no evil thereby happens to the just."— Preacher's Com.

"Not merely they that speak truly, but they that deal truly. Deeds of true dealing must confirm words of fair speaking."— Fausset.

22. abomination, etc., this takes the higher view: the evil of deceitful speech has already been shown; now God's view of it is declared.[b] deal truly, i. e. faithfully, according to promises.

God's delight. — Whatever gives delight to a noble and benevolent man must be a blessing to humanity, and everything will delight him that tends to minister blessing to the world. This is pre-eminently true of the good God. Truth is the great need of the race — truth in word and deed and thought. To this end Christ came into the world "to bear witness of the truth," because that alone is the cure for the world's woes. Then every man who is true must bless humanity and consequently delight God. Truth of any kind will be established in the course of time. If a man proclaim a scientific truth, however much he may be laughed at and disbelieved at first, his "lip," or his words, will be established in the end. The words of Galileo, when he uttered the truth, that the earth moved round the sun, have long since been "established." Time only is needed for any truth to take root-hold — it can never be overturned, whether it be physical or moral truth. Many truths which were scoffed at by most men, when they were first promulgated, are now regarded as truisms by almost everybody. And the lips that uttered them are now established and held in honor. — Hom. Com.

b Pr. vi. 16–19; Jno. iii. 20, 21.

"Be sure you are true yourselves and have a true purpose in view, and all discrepancies, inconsistencies, and difficulties will ultimately be smoothed down, and men will be brought to acknowledge the integrity of your heart." — J. Parker.

"Dare to be true, nothing can need a lie:
A fault which needs it most grows two thereby."—Herbert.

23. concealeth, comp. vs. 16. A wise man is not too ready to talk; he would rather think on, and seek to know more perfectly. Those who know but little are always eager to make the most of their little stock. The truly learned are usually modest and retiring.[c] proclaimeth, by rushing in at every opportunity they surely proclaim the limit of their knowledge.

Concealing knowledge (vs. 23).— A prudent man concealeth knowledge — I. When it is inopportune, John xvi. 12. II. Or above the capacity of his hearers, 1 Cor. ii. 2. III. Or likely to be misapplied, Mark xv. 5. IV. When sure of rejection, Matt. vii. 6. V. When calculated to injure the brethren, Lev. xix. 16. VI. When to utter it would be only for self-display, Prov. xxvii. 2.— Stems and Twigs.

Humility like ointment.— It is a point of humility to be silent in modesty, c "Knowing men, if they be prudent men, will carefully avoid everything that savors of ostentation, and not take all occasions to show their learning and reading, but only to use it for good purposes, and then let their own works praise them "— Matt. Henry.

Pr. xv. 2; Ec. iii. 7; Am. v. 13.

"Honors come by diligence; riches spring from economy."

and their words are so much more desirable, and better accepted as they are rare, and few, and seasonable. The ointment that is close kept in a box will yield a sweeter savor when it is poured out, than that which is continually open. A wine fresh from the vessel hath a better relish than that which was drawn long before there was any need of it.— Dods.

24—26. (24) bear rule, the rewards of diligence will set men in positions of independence and authority. be under tribute, R. V., "be put under task-work;" will be forced to labor. "The slothful inevitably descend to pauperism and servitude." (25) Heaviness, or trouble. maketh it stoop, "will bow it down."— Stuart. Care brings dejection and despair.[a] a good word, cheery, comforting word, or good tidings. (26) more excellent, better trans. "guideth his friends aright." seduceth them, better, "causeth them [the wicked] to err." Far from guiding others aright, the wicked, reaping the moral consequences of their sin, drift hopelessly astray themselves.

a We should watch against giving way to grief, lest it unfit us for duty.

"In this world, diligence puts a man at the head. In the eternal world, it will have made the man a king, and made all hell, and of course, all 'sloth under tribute' to him."—Miller.

"Hard words are like hailstones in summer, beating down and destroying what they would nourish were they melted into drops."

Heaviness in the heart (vs. 25).— The man that has every day to carry a heavy burden upon his shoulders will find that an attempt to carry the load of two days at once will weigh down his body beyond all his power to rise and stand upright. He must not try to carry more than the load of to-day, if he is to do anything at all. So is it with the spirit of a man if he goes out to meet the cares and difficulties of to-morrow, while he is bearing and battling with those of to-day. The weight of the present is as much as he can carry; his heart must "stoop" if he dwells upon the possible or certain trials of the future. The right way to bear burdens is to take the advice of One who Himself was a burden-bearer.— Hom. Com.

27, 28. (27) roasteth not, so as to get for himself the benefit of his own labors; he lets it slip from him. He does not improve his advantages.[b] R. V., marg. "catcheth not his prey." substance, etc., better rend. "But a precious treasure to a man is diligence. (28) Prosperity and success are found in doing right.

b He will let whatever he may gain slip from his hands for want of effort and attention.

Life in the way of righteousness (vs. 28). — "The path is life. 1. It is the path of a living soul. No one can continuously pursue a right course unless he has the spiritual life in him. The path of righteousness can only be trodden by those who have within them the soul-energy to follow it. 2. It is the path that quickens life. It is not like the deadly tracts of sin, those ways of wickedness that lead down into the fatal swamps of soul-death. This path runs over bracing mountain heights. 3. It is the path that leads to life. There is a fuller life beyond, not yet reached, and righteousness is the way to it. Every attainment in holiness is accompanied by a deepening of the soul-life."— Pul. Com.

"Life, in any sense, is a sweet mercy, a precious indulgence. Life natural is but a little spot of time between the two eternities, before and after, but it is of great consequence, and given us for this purpose, that glory may be begun in grace, and we have a further and further entrance into the kingdom of heaven here, as Peter saith (2 Peter i. 2). Christ hath unstinged the first death, and made of a postern to let out eternal life, a street-door to let in eternal life."—Preacher's Com.

Griffith Davies. — Griffith Davies was born in Carnarvonshire in 1788. He was the son of a poor man, and had no training at all in his young days, except that which he obtained from a laboring man in the village Sunday school. Up to the age of seventeen he had never been to a day school. He had then accumulated money enough to pay for three months' tuition of a very humble description. Here he learned the elements of arithmetic, and afterwards, while working in the slate quarry with his father, used to employ his spare time by figuring upon the pieces of slate with an iron nail. He thus became a very accurate calculator. In process of time he came up to London, opened a school, and had for one of his early pupils John Franklin, the subsequently celebrated Arctic voyager. In 1823 he was appointed actuary to the Guardian Life Office, which situation he maintained with honor and efficiency all his life, and died a humble and devoted Christian.

CHAPTER THE THIRTEENTH.

1. instruction, better, "correction;" Wordsworth and others suggest that it should read, "A wise son is his father's instruction," i. e. he is the fruit of it, his wisdom is produced by it.[c] scorner, Ps. i. 1; Pr. i. 22.[d] rebuke,[e] a much stronger word than correction.

c Pr. x. 1, 17.

d "The heedless reviler of religion who has long ago thrown aside all childlike piety and reverence for the holy."—Zöckler.

e "How can those mend a fault

Wisdom and folly (vs. 1). — I. The wise son bears his father attentively, patiently, obediently, though the words may not always be pleasant or laudatory. II. The foolish son, being scornful, conceited, proud, heareth not rebuke though he most needs it. 1. Compare the course and the end of the two; 2. How is the father affected in either case. — Hive.

Docility vs. stubbornness. — Let us carry this into the distinctly religious sphere. To be wise is to be a good listener. In the expressive phrase of the Bible, to "hearken to the voice of Jehovah," to listen to the suggestions of the inward monitor, is the secret of a sober, well-balanced habit of mind, and of every safe line of conduct. All that God teaches, by the voice of inspired teachers, by our own experience, by the inner revelations of the heart, is "a father's instruction." Above all, instruction by means of suffering is God's fatherly way with souls. And we have the great example of Christ to guide us and to sweeten obedience, for he "learned" it by the things which he suffered. On the other hand, the scorner has cast aside all reverential awe in the presence of the Holy One. To refuse the faithful warnings of friends, to be no better for those lessons of experience which are written in personal suffering, is to disown one's filial relation, and to estrange one's self from God. — E. Johnson.

2, 3. (2) eat good, comp. ch. xii. 14. fruit of . . mouth, i. e. words. By his kindly speech and wise counsels he shall gain the good will of his neighbors and the blessing of God. trangressors, R. V., "treacherous;" the Hebrew is, "The soul (i. e. the desire, or delight) of the perfidious (is) violence." Such men have only one thing at heart, viz., to wrong their neighbor, and to increase their own property by any, even nefarious, proceedings. (3) keepeth his life, bec. he does not provoke others to violence towards him; he does not make enemies. openeth . . lips, "loves to bluster, and make a noise, and affect such a liberty of speech as bids defiance both to God and man." — Henry. destruction, of his reputation, his interest, his comfort.

Man speaking (vss. 2, 3). — I. The self-profiting and self-ruinous in speech. The speech of the good — 1. Promotes the development of his own spiritual being; 2. Gratifies his own moral nature; 3. Produces good results in the hearer. II. The self-controlled and the self-reckless in speech. 1. The controlled may be useful; 2. The reckless, dangerous. — Thomas.

A sermon to one hearer. — Dr. Beecher once engaged to preach for a country minister on exchange, and the Sabbath proved to be one excessively stormy, cold, and uncomfortable. It was midwinter, and the snow was piled all along in the roads, so as to make the passage very difficult. Still the minister urged his horse through the drifts, put the animal into a shed, and went in. As yet there was no person in the house; and after looking about he took his seat in the pulpit. Soon the door opened, and a single individual walked up the aisle, looked about, and took a seat. The hour came for commencing service, but no more hearers. Whether to preach to such an audience was a question — and it was one that Lyman Beecher was not long deciding. He felt that he had a duty to perform, and he had no right to refuse to do it because only one man could reap the benefit of it; and accordingly he went through all the services, praying, singing, preaching, and the benediction, with only one hearer. And when all was over, he hastened down from the desk to speak to his congregation, but he had departed. A circumstance so rare was referred to occasionally; but, twenty years after, it was brought to the doctor's mind quite strangely. Traveling somewhere in Ohio, the doctor alighted from the stage one day in a pleasant village, when a gentleman stepped up and spoke to him, familiarly calling him by name. "I do not remember you," said the doctor. "I suppose not," said the stranger; "but we once spent two hours together in a house alone in a storm." "I do not recall it, sir," added the old man; "pray when was it?" "Do you remember preaching, twenty years ago, in such a place, to a single person?" "Yes, yes," said the doctor, grasping his hand, "I do, indeed; and if you are the man, I have been wishing to see you ever since." "I am the man, sir; and that sermon saved my soul, made a minister of me, and yonder is my church. The converts of that sermon, sir, are all over Ohio."

4–6. (4) soul, the sluggard only forms vain wishes, he makes no effort to secure their fulfilment. He builds many castles, but they are all castles in the air.[a] made fat, the figure for fully prospered and satisfied. Ch. xii. 14. (5) lying, put generally for all deceitful and injurious speech and action.[b] loathsome, perhaps should be read, acteth basely and shamefully; R. V., marg., "causeth shame and bringeth reproach." (6) keepeth, protecteth.

who will not be told of it, but count those their enemies who do them that kindness?"—Matt. Henry.

"The young man who considers himself to be exceptionally clever is tempted to idolize his own notions and despise parental correction."— Pul. Com.

"Take heed that thy tongue cut not thy throat."— Arab. Prov.

Ja. iii. 6.

"Keep thine heart. This guards the citadel. Keep thy mouth. This sets a watch at the gates. If they be well guarded the city is safe. Leave them unprotected — thus was Babylon taken."— Bridges.

"Religion is an every-day battle. He that is not conscious of it, has no true religion."— Miller.

"The joy resulting from the diffusion of blessings to all around us is the purest and sublimest that can ever enter the human mind, and can be conceived only by those who have experienced it."— Porteus.

"Discretion in speech is more than eloquence. When in doubt, abstain."— Bacon.

"The ill-timed truth we might have kept,
Who knows how sharp it pierced and stung?
The word we had not sense to say,
Who knows how grandly it had rung?"

[a] 2 Th. iii. 10.

[b] "A soul that has been made right in relation to the laws of its own spiritual being, to the universe, and upright, etc., lit. innocence of way, an abstract for the concrete, equivalent to "them that walk uprightly." overthroweth,[a] lit. plungeth into sin with all its consequences.

The effects of sin (vss. 5, 6). — I. Give the character of the sinner. 1. What is sin? — transgression of law; 2. Hence sin is contempt of God; 3. Rejection of Christ; 4. In the rank of sinners place infidels, etc.; 5. Such are sinners by name, practice, motives, etc. II. Show how sin is the ruin of the sinner. 1. It exhausts his property; 2. Blasts reputation; 3. Destroys health; 4. Hastens approach of death; 5. Effects the condemnation of the soul. — Theta in 400 Sks.

The minister of Clermont. — The minister of the seminary at Clermont (France) having been seized at Autun by the populace, the mayor, who wished to save him, advised him not to take the oath, but to allow him to tell the people that he had taken it. "I would myself make known your falsehood to the people," replied the clergyman: "it is not permited me to ransom my life by a lie. The God who prohibits my taking this oath will not allow me to make it believed that I have taken it." The mayor was silent, and the minister was martyred.

7. maketh, R. V., marg., "feigneth." hath nothing, of real and lasting worth. "A maxim aimed at foolish pride of birth and empty love of display on the part of men without means, as ch. xii. 9." — Zöckler. maketh himself poor, for some purpose simulating poverty to conceal great wealth.[b] We must not trust appearances.

The "poor-rich." — He who is really wealthy and yet does not use his wealth to the glory of God "hath nothing." 1. He is poor in relation to his fellow-creatures. The greatest beggar cannot do less for the world than he does, and he is poor in the love and gratitude of those from whom he might win a rich reward by the exercise of benevolence. 2. He is poor in spiritual riches. A miserly, niggardly man must be poor "towards God," must be destitute of all that God counts worth possessing. The rich church of Laodicea was so "increased with goods" that she said, "I have need of nothing," but in the sight of the Son of God she was "poor." — Preacher's Com.

The three brothers. — A minister soliciting aid towards the erection of a place of worship waited on an individual distinguished for his wealth and benevolence. Approving the case, he presented to the minister a handsome donation, and, turning to his three sons, who had witnessed the transaction, he advised them to imitate his example. "My dear boys," said he, "you have heard the case; now, what will you give?" One said, "I will give all that my pockets will furnish;" another observed, "I will give half that I have in my purse;" the third sternly remarked, "I will give nothing." Some years after, the minister had occasion to visit the same place, and recollecting the family he had called upon, he inquired into the actual position of the parties. He was informed that the generous father was dead; the youth who had cheerfully given all his store was living in affluence; the son who had divided his pocket-money was in comfortable circumstances; but the third, who had indignantly refused to assist, and haughtily declared "he would give nothing," was so reduced as to be supported by his two brothers.

Industry.—

Be thrifty; but not covetous: therefore give Thy need, thine honor, and thy friend his due.
Never was scraper brave man. Get to live;
Then live, and use it; else, it is not true
That thou hast gotten. Surely use alone Makes money not a contemptible stone.—G. Herbert.

8, 9. (8) ransom, a rich man can save himself from many difficulties and dangers by the sacrifice of a portion of his wealth, e. g. when his money or his life is demanded by a robber; when men in authority make extortionate demands on pain of death; or when he has incurred extreme penalty by infringement of law.[c] the poor heareth not rebuke, has not to listen to (Job iii. 18) threats from the covetous or abuse from the envious. He has nothing to lose and no one can gain anything by interfering with him. So the poor man is at peace. "A hundred men cannot rob one pauper." (9) light,[d] this light is the grace and virtue which adorn the good man's life, and which beam through all his actions with a cheerful, kindly radiance.

to God, has an instinctive repugnance to falsehood." — Dav. Thomas.

Ps. cxix. 29

a "Maketh to slip." — Wordsworth.

"Where grace reigns, sin is loathsome; where sin reigns the man is loathsome."—Henry.

b "The teaching of ch. xi. 24 finds its echo here. There is a seeming wealth behind wh. there lies a deep spiritual poverty and wretchedness. There is a poverty which makes a man rich for the kingdom of God."—Spk. Com.

2 Co. vi. 10; Phi. iii. 7, 9.

"There is no art or science that is too difficult for industry to attain to: it is the gift of tongues, and makes a man understood and valued in all countries, and by all nations. It is the philosopher's stone that turns all metals. In a word, it conquers all enemies, and makes fortune itself pay contribution" — Lord Clarendon.

"He that hath empty pockets may whistle in the face of a highwayman."—Juvenal.

"Grete rest stondeth in litel businesse."—Chaucer.

c "Who ever thinks of robbing or murdering a beggar? He is everywhere safe and free from molestation fr. whom there is nothing to be had. Poverty is then not without its advantages."—Quoted by Dav. Thomas.

d Matt. v. 14, 16.

rejoiceth,[a] increaseth, groweth in brightness, so giving ever more joy. lamp, or candle, i. e. "the false show of wisdom or piety wh. may glimmer for a time." A word signifying both a temporary and a man-lighted thing is chosen in order to point the contrast.[b] The light of the wicked is a lamp of their own kindling.

Joy and gloom. — I. Light is the symbol of joy. II. Hence the cheerful burning of a light is the symbol of the good man's heart. He sits in the centre and enjoys clear day. III. Gloom is the natural emblem of sorrow. IV. The putting out of a lamp in darkness is the emblem of the extinction of joy, of hope — of all that makes life worth having, and of life itself. — Pul. Com. — The lights of the soul (vs. 9). — The text leads us to consider two things. I. The joyous light of the soul — the light of the righteous. II. The transient light of the soul — the lamp of the wicked. — Thomas.

10. Only,[c] better, "By pride cometh only contention." One who is haughty and overbearing, or who is too conceited to receive advice, is sure to quarrel with others. pride, or self-conceit, wh. is an unfailing source of quarreling. well advised, those showing a modest inclination to consult and consider others.[d]

Pride (vs. 10). — We learn — I. That pride generates contention: for in society pride is essentially exacting, insolent, heartless, detracting; hence is ever generating contention. II. That pride rejects counsels. — Thomas.

Too much approbation unsafe. — Donatello, the great Florentine sculptor, went at one time of his life to Padua, where he was received with the utmost enthusiasm, and loaded with approbation and honors. But soon he declared his intention of returning to Florence, on the ground that the sharp assaults and the cutting criticisms which always assailed him in his native city were much more favorable to his art than the atmosphere of admiration and eulogy. In this way he thought that he would be stimulated to greater efforts, and ultimately attain to a surer reputation. In the same spirit the greatest of modern art critics has told us how valuable to him were the criticisms which his humble Italian servant made on his drawings. Certainly, "with those who allow themselves to be advised is wisdom." "He that trusteth in his own heart," and cannot receive the advice of others, "is a fool; but whoso walketh wisely he shall be delivered," sometimes perhaps by the humble suggestions of very simple people. — Exp. Bib.

11, 12. (11) by vanity,[e] by some means distinct fr. honest and earnest labor. The Sept. has "in haste," without effort. be diminished, we have a similar proverb, "Light come, light go." by labour, Heb. with the hand; "handful by handful," by patient industry.[f] (12) Hope, "we live by hope." deferred, the attainment of the desire is sometimes long deferred. heart sick, languid, despondent. desire cometh, or when the object of desire is attained. "Desire that hath come is desire accomplished." tree of life, fig. for a thing that continually bears fruitage of blessing;[g] "a vivid image of the animating power of hope when it is fulfilled." — Stuart.

Fraudulent gain. — This looks very different from coarse, vulgar robbery. The sleek swindler owns no common brotherhood with the brutal burglar. Fraudulent gain is got in the way of business; it is not at all like the money directly stolen from a man's pocket. The process is so very roundabout that it is difficult to trace the transition from fair dealing to cheating. The decorus thief would be horrified at hearing his true name. He knows his actions are not quite straightforward, but the crookedness of them is almost hidden from himself by neat contrivances. Now, all this makes the pursuit of fraudulent gain the more treacherous and dangerous. A man who follows such a course is lost before he owns himself to be dishonest. — Pul. Com.

Heart-sickness. — Sickness of body enfeebles its powers, so does sickness of soul. A man derives strength to work when he possesses hope of enjoying some good thing the future. Hope is a kind of spiritual food, by feeding upon which a man renews his energy. But the constant postponement of its realization renders the hope less and less strong, and has the same effect upon the mind as insufficient food has upon the body, it enfeebles its resolution and lessens its courage. If a hungry man finds each day that his portion of food grows less, he will soon be conscious of loss of flesh and strength, and if the process goes on for many months he will lose all power of action and probably his very life. The same thing takes place in a man's spirit when hope is indefinitely "deferred." — Hom. Com.

[a] "The same root, in Arabic, means to laugh, or to sport" — Hitzig.

[b] "The righteous have the true light in them. That wh. belongs to the wicked is but derived and temporary, and shall be extinguished before long." — Spk. Com.

[c] "The meaning is this — 'The obstinacy wh. attends self-conceit produces contention, wh. the well-advised thus evincing modesty avoid.'" — Fausset.

[d] "Meekly ask counsel of God, consult His word, His ministers, your pious friends, and your own conscience; ponder your path and you will be enabled to act prudently and live in peace." — Nicholls.

"He whose pride oppresses the humble may, perhaps, be humbled, but will never be humble." — Lavater.

[e] Some trans. "Wealth dwindles faster than the breath." — Miller.

"Secured in an unsubstantial, inconsiderate, fraudulent way." — Ewald.

[f] "It describes the gradual and progressive accumulation of wealth resulting from diligence and exertion, and so is in significant contrast with the impatient dishonesty of the preceding clause." — Zöckler.

[g] "Our wisdom is not to promise ourselves too much from the creature; but in reference to what God has promised we should never despair, however long we may wait." — Nicholls.

13, 14. (13) the word,[a] of warning and reproof; then all words of truth and duty. be destroyed, lit. is in bonds to it; cannot escape it, must suffer for its neglect. feareth, so as to concern himself about obedience. shall be rewarded, or to him is requital. (14) fountain, or ever fresh source. snares of death, Ps. xviii. 5; an established formula for the description of mortal perils.

The Word (vs. 13).—I. The Word despised is ruin. 1. Because he who despises rejects the only instrument of soul-salvation; 2 Brings on his nature the condemnation of heaven. II. The Word reverenced is blessedness. 1. Such a man is rewarded in its blessed influences on his own soul; 2. With the approbation of heaven.—Thomas.

Security.—Number the nations over one by one, and see where property is valuable and life secure; mark the places where you would like to invest your means and educate your family; you will shun some of the sunniest climes of earth, as if they lay under a polar night, because the light of truth has been taken from their sky. Traverse the world in search of merely human good, seeking but an earthly home, and your tent, like Abraham's, will certainly be pitched at "the place of the altar."—Arnot.—Law of the wise.—For us the "law of the wise" is best represented by the Book of God. It is essentially life-giving. Its design is not to publish and confirm the sentence of death, but to show how death may be escaped. The declaration of the sentence of death is only attended to show the necessity, and to impress the importance and value of the tidings of life. Life is the end of Divine revelation.—Ward-law.

15, 16. (15) Good understanding, right perception and action. "Kindly wisdom." As a good and wise man uses his gifts and graces properly he wins the love and respect of his fellow-men. way . . hard, "way of the treacherous is stony."—Stuart. "Rough to the feet, and like a craggy precipice." "The idea is that of a barren, dry soil, or the impassable marsh, in contrast with the fountain of life, carrying joy and refreshment with it."—Spk. Com. (16) prudent, etc., Pr. xii. 23; xv. 2. dealeth with knowledge, i. e. "acteth with foresight and deliberation." layeth open, spreadeth. This proverb rebukes the rash and inconsiderate. Some are forward to talk of that they do not understand, and to undertake that for wh. they are unfit; and such persons speedily expose their ignorance and inability, and make themselves ridiculous.

Downward, yet difficult (vs. 15).—I. This fact is opposed to received notions. II. This fact is in accordance with experience. The transgressor finds—1. Difficulties innumerable; 2. Dangers on every side; 3. Disappointments without number; 4. Penalties most dreadful afterwards.—Stems and Twigs.—The hardship of sin.—I. A truth to be confirmed. It is hard to themselves—to others, to their families, their friends, to society. II. A dispensation to be approved. It illustrates the mingled justice and mercy of God, who has made the way to hell difficult. The hardness of the way of sin is often the means of stopping sinners in their course. III. A warning to be enforced. Take care how you take the first step. Remember that the hardness of the way is nothing to the bitterness of the end.—S. Thodey.

Way of transgressors.—The results of wickedness come upon a man in a thousand different ways. They are not summed up in one punishment, which may be endured once for all. The consciousness of wickedness follows a man all the days of the week and all the hours of the day, and comes up at the most unexpected times; it afflicts him with constant nightmare; every tap at the door may be the coming-in of the jailor; every post may bring the letter of doom; everything that occurs is charged with a possibility of mischief. The stars in their courses fight against the bad man; he has no satisfaction in his feast, no holiday in his summer; the flowers that he plants in his garden become poison trees, and the birds that ought to sing to him seem to bring messages suggestive of vengeance and penalty.—J. Parker.

17—19. wicked, in the sense of unfaithful to his trust, or wanting diligence in the execution of it. into mischief, R. V., "into evil," as a punishment for his faithlessness.[b] ambassador, only another word for messenger, not strictly a king's representative. health, to all concerned; to himself, to those who send him, and to those to whom he is sent.[c] (18) Poverty, etc., a sentiment previously expressed, ch. x. 17; xii. 1. instruction, discipline, a "Those that prefer the rules of carnal policy before Divine precepts, and the allurements of the world and the flesh before God's promises and comforts, despise His Word, giving the preference to those things wh. stand in competition with it."—Matt. Henry.

He. ii. 2, 3; xii. 25.

"Specially forbidden is the keeping of the bread of heaven. It was to be gathered every morning. But the saint who hoards up the past is the Israelite who kept the manna, and who found that it 'bred worms and stank.'"—Preacher's Com.

"The more we despise the law, the more we are bound by it."—Miller.

"A good understanding must include four things—enlightenment, impartiality, religiousness and practicalness. So a good understanding is tantamount to practical godliness."—Dav. Thomas Voltaire said, "I begin to fancy myself in the most deplorable condition, environed by deepest darkness on every side. I wish I had never been born."

"The worst man has knowledge enough to save him—that is, God's goodness is such that if a man would use the light he had, he would start from that point, and be helped into the kingdom."—Miller.

"Indolence is, methinks, an intermediate state between pleasure and pain, and very much unbecoming any part of our life after we are out of the nurse's arms."—Steele.

b 2 Ki. v. 26, 27.

c Ge. xxiv. 34, 37, 38, 51-56.

R. V., "correction." (19) desire accomplished.[a] "It is sweet to a good man to obtain his wish: but for a wicked man to leave, to abandon evil to which he clings so fondly, is a detestable alternative." — Pul. Com.

The incorrigible and the docile (vs. 18). — I. The doom of the incorrigible — 1. In secular matters; 2. In intellectual matters; 3. In moral matters. II. The destiny of the teachable. 1. His own soul will honor him; 2. Society will honor him; 3. God will honor him. — Thomas.

Faithful messengers. — In early times, when no public postal arrangements existed, and when reading and writing were not generally cultivated, communications were more often sent by verbal messages and personal messengers. Great mischief would then accrue through unfaithfulness on the part of one of these agents of business or friendship. But important as would be the social effects arising out of this condition of affairs, far more momentous consequences must flow from the action of messengers between God and man. They indeed need to be faithful. — Pul. Com. — A faithful ambassador. — Count Bismarck left to consult his Majesty, and returned in a quarter of an hour. It then appeared that the King accepted the proposal as to Tours, but insisted that the garrison of Strasburg should constitute themselves prisoners. It would seem that M. Favre was out of health at the time, for he describes himself as being "perfectly exhausted" on the return of Prince Bismarck. For a moment he thought he should faint, and turned away to hide the tears which suffocated him. Asking to be excused for his involuntary weakness, he took his leave in these words: "I made a mistake, M. le Comte, in coming here; but I do not regret it. I have suffered sufficiently to excuse myself in my own eyes; but in any case I only yielded to a feeling of duty. I will report to my government all that you have said, and should they consider it fit again to send me to you, however cruel the task for me, I shall have the honor of returning. I am grateful for the kindness you have shown me, but I fear that all that can be done is to let events take their course. The inhabitants of Paris are courageous, and resolved to make every sacrifice; and their heroism may change the course of events. If you have the honor of conquering them, you will never subjugate them. The whole nation is possessed with the same sentiments. As long as there can be found one element of resistance amongst us, we shall fight you. This becomes an interminable struggle between two nations who should extend their hands to each other. I had hoped for a different solution. I leave most unhappy, but nevertheless full of hope." — Cassel's Hist. of Franco-German War.

[a] Spk. Com. gives two poss. trans. of this obscure verse. "Satisfied desire is pleasant; therefore it is an abomination to fools to depart fr. the evil on wh. their minds are set."

"Sweet is the satisfaction of desire, yet the wicked will not depart fr. the evil wh. makes that satisfaction impossible."

"'To every man his work;' and in that, even if it is only running little errands for the skilled workmen, we may excel to the edifying of the church." — F. R. Havergal.

"Sloth makes all things difficult, but Industry all easy; and he that riseth late must trot all day, and shall scarce overtake his business at night; while Laziness travels so slowly, that Poverty soon overtakes him." — Franklin.

20. walketh, as his friends and chosen companions.[b] companion, etc., the play upon words in the Heb. of this clause may be thus imitated, "He who attendeth fools tendeth to folly."[c] be destroyed, the antithesis is best brought out by the rendering of the Vulgate: "The friend of fools shall turn out the same." He who associates with fools shall do evil.

The best company (vs. 20). — I. Who are the wise? 1. Those who seek the favor and friendship of God, the best of all ends; 2. Those who seek them through the acceptance of the Gospel, the best of all means. II. How may we walk with the wise? 1. By cherishing their principles; 2. By cultivating their society; 3. By perusing their publications. III. Why will walking with the wise make us wise? 1. There is the force of example; 2. There is the power of sympathy; 3. There is the influence of conversation; 4. There is the promise of God. — Brooks.

True wisdom. — How wise to walk the path of life with a Divine Friend! — with Him who Himself is "the Wisdom of God;" intimacy with whom will draw our spirit up toward all that is worthiest and noblest; whose presence will insure guardianship from all serious evil, and enrichment with every true blessing, and will gladden with all pure and lasting joy. — Pul. Com. — The scented clay. — "One day, as I was in the bath, a friend of mine put in my hand a piece of scented clay. I took it, and said to it, 'Art thou musk or ambergris? for I am charmed with thy perfume.' It answered, 'I was a despicable piece of clay, but I was some time in the company of the rose; the sweet quality of my companion was communicated to me, otherwise I should only be a bit of clay as I appear to be.'" — Persian Fable. — Lord Peterborough and Fénélon. — When Lord Peterborough lodged for a season with Fénélon, Archbishop of Cambray, he was so delighted with his piety and virtue, that he exclaimed at parting, "If I stay here any longer, I shall [b] "A good man is the best friend, and therefore soonest to be chosen, longer to be retained, and indeed never to be parted with, unless he cease to be that for which he was chosen." — J. Taylor.

[c] "He that would be safe fr. the acts of evil must wisely avoid the occasions." — Bp. Hall.

"The road is long by precept: it is short and effectual by example." — Seneca.

"People have no right to make fools of themselves, unless they have no relations to blush for them." — Haliburton.

become a Christian in spite of myself." — Companions. — A Dutch proverb says, "He that lives with cripples learns to limp;" and the Spanish, "He that goes with wolves learns to howl." We have a homely English proverb, "He that lies down with dogs shall rise up with fleas;" so the Orientals say, "He that takes the raven for his guide shall light upon carrion."

"Every man is his own heir. He devises his own future and he inherits his own past."—H. F. Hedge.

21, 22. (21) pursueth, good shall be, "Destiny follows character. Misery grows out of sin, and happiness out of goodness."[a] "The avenging deities are shod with wool," but they never pause or tire. "Sinners suffer not only the natural consequences of crime in external evil, injury to body, estate, reputation, etc. (Ps. xi. 6), but also stings of conscience and remorse; even seeming prosperity is often a chastisement, and long impunity is only augmenting the coming retribution. As the shadow attends the substance, so guilt is attached to sin, and brings with it punishment." — Pul. Com. Horace suggests that a wicked man cannot escape fr. himself. Shakespeare in "Macbeth" points out the tenacity with wh. conscience pursues. (22) leaveth, etc., transmitteth his estate. children's children, goodness secures stability through generations. wealth . . just, an intimation that, in the long run, "the heaped-up treasures of the wicked find their way into the hands of better men."[b] "Ill-gotten wealth no third descendant holds."

a "Character draws destiny after it by an almighty magnetism. It is a fruitful tree; it never ceases bearing; every branch is clustered; but the fruit is either misery or happiness, according to its own vital sap." — Dav. Thomas

Nu. xxxv. 19; Ro. ii. 6-10.

b Job xxvii. 17; Ec. ii. 26.

Goodness is the safest law of entail.

The law of repayment runs through nature. He who sows seed is repaid by a harvest. All her forces — rain, sunlight, heat and cold — combine to give back to the husbandman that which he has entrusted to her care. And she repays of the same kind, wheat for the sowing of wheat, thistles for the planting of thistles. She also repays with liberal interest. One head of thistledown scattered over a field will reproduce a hundred heads in a few months. One grain of corn will produce an ear of thirty or forty grains. The law in the kingdom of nature is also the law of the kingdom of grace. Evil sown, as we have just seen under another metaphor, necessitates a reaping of evil. Good sown insures a reaping of good. And grace is not behind nature in a liberal repayment. He who sows handfuls shall reap armfuls. He that goes forth with the seed basket returns with sheaves. The one "corn of wheat bears much fruit." This repayment begins in time, and extends beyond it. Righteousness as well as sin is its own present reward, and is the present first fruits. But the righteous man must wait for the "resurrection of the just" for the abundant harvest. — Hom. Com.

"No man liveth unto himself, even for a single day; all the time he is really living for posterity, and in such a way that posterity will be affected, either happily or unhappily, by the course of action with which his name is identified." — J. Parker.

23, 24. (23) Much . . poor, The reference is to newly-cleared land, which has cost much labor. "The poor, but righteous man, who industriously cultivates his little plot of ground, secures a good return, and is happy in eating the labor of his hands (Ps. cxxviii. 2)." want of judgment, R. V., "by reason of injustice," or disregard of right, comp. ch. xvi. 8.[c] "Some (poor men) are amply supplied by honest labor; others (rich) lose all by wrong dealing." (24) spareth his rod, the instrument of wise and loving correction.[d] hateth,[e] in the Bible sense of loving less; loving unworthily, injudiciously. betimes, or early in the morning of life before the development of evil habits, or directly after the disobedience.

c Pr. xii. 11.

d He. xii. 6, 7; Pr. iii. 12; xxiii. 13, 14; xxix. 15.

e "Acts as if he hated him." — Fausset.

Parental corrections (vs. 24). — I. The rod, however used, should be a last resort. II. We should be sure that a fault has been committed. III. Let there be always a due proportion between the fault and the correction. IV. Never chastise in a passion. — Wardlaw.

"It is his rod that must be used, the rod of a parent, directed by wisdom and love, and designed for good, not the rod of a servant." — Matt. Henry.

Parental corrections. — A little boy of about five years of age, having offended his father, was called to account by him. After conversing with his son, and telling him the guilt and consequences of disobedience, the father knelt down and prayed for him. He then repeated to him a few texts of Scripture, such as, "He that spareth the rod hateth his son; but he that loveth him, chasteneth him betimes." "Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying." "The rod and reproof give wisdom; but a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame." After briefly explaining these passages, the father continued, "You see, my son, what God says; now what is my duty?" "Why, pa," said the little boy, "it is your duty to punish me; I have done wrong and deserve it." After receiving the chastisement, he embraced and kissed his father; and promised never again to disobey him. — Whitecross.

"Children have been called rough diamonds. Parents are to polish them, and they must neither be struck unskilfully nor left uncut." — Dav. Thomas.

25. eateth, the good fruitage of his righteous ways and works. God's promise to the righteous is, "Verily thou shalt be fed."[f] belly, "the stomf Ps. xxvii. 3.

ach of the wicked shall be empty." — Stuart. Even in this life the wicked has not the best of it.[a]

A great change. — An old medical gentleman, nine years ago, Dr. ——, had a respectable practice, and kept his carriage. He soon commenced, however, to partake too freely of intoxicating liquors. In a short time he neglected his patients, his character also became injured, and for some time he and his once respectable family have been actually reduced to such a state of destitution by intemperance, that they have even been deprived of lodgings, and had nothing to allay the cravings of nature but a few cold potatoes, received from their neighbors. A few weeks ago they were admitted to the workhouse; their passage has since been paid to America, and they are about to leave the land of their fathers. What a change in nine years! — Whitecross.

CHAPTER THE FOURTEENTH.

1—3. (1) Every wise woman, lit. the wisdom of women.[b] buildeth, or establisheth, confirmeth, increaseth the wealth and stability of it.[c] foolish, i. e. the foolish woman; unprincipled women by bad management or evil doings soon ruin a home. (2) He . . uprightness, wh. is the sure sign of the true fear of God.[d] "In his uprightness" may be trans. "in a level track." perverse, wayward, preferring the uneven and crooked ways of wilfulness. despiseth, Jehovah; disregarding His laws and His judgments. (3) rod, or branch, "wh. he brandishes at random, and wh. often recoils on himself." The foolish here is the boastful and overbearing braggart. preserve them, or procure good to them. "These do not abuse speech to insult and injure others; and their words tend to conciliate others, and promote peace and good will (comp. ch. xii. 6, 18)."

Housewifery (vs. 1).— I. Its great power. 1. It can build up materially, spiritually; 2. It can pull down. II. Its necessary qualification — wisdom. 1. Using the right means; 2. Using the right means for the right end.— Thomas.

A literary wife.— Reiske affixed his wife's portrait to his learned and excellent edition of the Greek orators. In the preface to his first volume, he speaks with much gratitude and affection of the assistance she rendered him in comparing the numerous editions and manuscripts, while he used to correct the text. "She is," says he, "a modest and frugal woman: she loves me and my literary employments, and is an industrious and skillful assistant. Induced by affection for me, she applied herself to the study of Greek and Latin under my tuition. She knew neither of these languages when we were married; but she was soon able to lighten the multifarious and very severe labors to be performed in this undertaking. The Aldine and Pauline editions she alone compared; also the fourth Augustine edition. As I had taught her the Erasmian pronunciation, she read first to me the Morellian copy, while I read those in manuscript. She labored unweariedly in arranging, correcting, and preparing my confused copy for the press. As I deeply feel, and publicly express, my gratitude for her aid, so I trust that present and future generations may hold her name in honored remembrance."— Mrs. Child.— Heroic women.— Society is full of heroes of love and domestic fidelity. Thousands of them are unknown on earth. They march in ranks and battalions, so that we speak of them in nouns of multitude, as drunkards' wives. All those that under such circumstances lift themselves up above the ordinary line of human conduct, are heroic. And God waits for them, and heaven is homesick for them. Oh, how they will shine there! Perchance, as you see them going through the street, meek and patient, their dress growing more and more rusty, you smile pityingly, and say, "They are poor drunkards' wives; they were promising once, but they have gone down, down, down, and now they are nowhere." I beg your pardon, they have not gone down. They have been going up. And when you rise, with all your wealth, and learning, and genius, and stand in heaven, having escaped damnation so as by fire, you may stand lowest, and see them as far above you as the stars to-night are above your heads. For the last shall be first, and the lowest shall be highest. — Beecher.— The temper of women.— Happy the man on whose marriage hearth temper smiles kind from the eyes of woman! "No deity present," saith the heathen proverb, "where absent — prudence" — no joy long a guest where peace is not a dweller. Peace, so like a Is. lxv. 13, 14; Mi. vi. 14.

"Said Luther (who made many a meal of a boiled herring), 'Let us be content to fare hard here: have we not the bread that came down from heaven?'"— Trapp.

"Thou hast made us for Thyself, and the heart is restless till it finds rest in Thee."— St. Augustine.

b Pr. i. 20; ix. 1.

c "The fullest recognition that has as yet met us of the importance of woman, for good or evil, in all human society."— Spk. Com.

"By a prudent wife, one that is pious, industrious, and considerate, the affairs of the family are made to prosper, debts are paid, portions raised, provision made, the children well educated and maintained, and the family has comfort within doors and credit without. Thus is the house built."— Matt. Henry.

d "The generating in human hearts supreme love to God, is the only effective way to promote true morality in men — morality in the family, in the market, in the nation, in the world. There is no true morality without religion. Piety is the first principle of all rectitude.— Dav. Thomas.

"The bleakest rock upon the loneliest heath, feels in its barrenness some touch of spring, and in the April dew, or beam of May, its moss and lichens freshen and revive — and thus the heart most sear'd to human pleasure, melts at the tear, joys at the smile of women." — Sir Joseph Beaumont.

faith, that they may be taken for each other, and poets have clad them with the same veil. But in childhood, in early youth, expect not the changeless green of the cedar. Wouldst thou distinguish fine temper from spiritless dulness, from cold simulation — ask less what the temper, than what the disposition. Is the nature sweet and trustful, is it free from the morbid self-love which calls itself "sensitive feeling," and frets at imaginary offenses — is the tendency to be grateful for kindness, yet take kindness meekly, and accept as a benefit what the vain call a due? From dispositions thus blessed, sweet temper will come forth to gladden thee, spontaneous and free. Quick with some, with some slow, word and look emerge out of the heart. Be thy first question, "Is the heart itself generous and tender?" If it be so self-control comes with deepening affection. Call not that a good heart, which, hastening to sting if a fibre be ruffled, cries, "I am no hypocrite." Accept that excuse, and revenge becomes virtue. But where the heart, if it give the offense, pines till it win back the pardon; if offended itself, bounds forth to forgive, ever longing to soothe, ever grieved if it wound; then be sure that its nobleness will need but few trials of pain in each outbreak, to refine and chasten its expression. Fear not then; be but noble thyself, thou art safe. — Bulwer Lytton.

4. crib is clean, needs therefore no labor, but as certainly yields no increase or profit.[a] The meaning is, "He who will develop his wealth to a gratifying abundance must employ the appropriate means." — Hitzig. The ox is the animal used in farming work. strength, wh. is used in ploughing, etc., but calls for labor in tending and feeding, etc.[b]

The clean crib (vs. 4). — I. The negative gain of indolence: saves labor. 1. In secular matters; 2. In intellectual matters; 3. In spiritual matters. II. The positive loss of indolence. 1. In secular matters, the pleasure of gaining and rightly using wealth; 2. In intellectual matters; 3. In spiritual matters. — Thomas.

Frederick II of Prussia, even after age and infirmities had increased upon him, gave strict orders never to be allowed to sleep later than four in the morning. Peter the Great, whether at work in the docks at London as a ship-carpenter, or at the anvil as a blacksmith, or on the throne of Russia, always rose before daylight. "I am," says he, "for making my life as long as I can, and therefore sleep as little as possible."

5, 6. (5) will not lie,[c] cannot be induced to swerve from the truth by threat or bribe. utter lies, Heb. "breathe forth;" the very breath of him is lies. (6) scorner . . not, bec. his spirit prevents him from either seeing or valuing truth. Only the humble and teachable spirit succeeds in acquiring wisdom.

Scorning vs. knowledge. — I see two men prostrate on the ground and bleeding, while one man stands between them,* with serenest aspect looking to the skies. Who and what are these? The two prostrate forms are superstition and unbelief. Superstition bowed down to worship his idol, and cut his flesh with stones to atone for his soul's sin. Unbelief scorned to be confined, like an inferior creature, to the earth, and was ever leaping up in the hope of standing on the stars. Exhausted by his efforts he fell, and the fall bruised him, so that he lay as low as the neighbor whom he despised. He who stands between them neither bowed himself to the ground, nor attempted to scale the heavens. He neither degraded himself beneath a man's place, nor attempted to raise himself above it. He abode on earth, but he stood erect there. He did not proudly profess to be, but meekly sought to find God. This man understands his place, and feels his needs; to him, therefore, knowledge is easy. To him that hath shall be given. He has the beginning of wisdom, and he will reach in good time his glad consummation. "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom." — Arnot.

7—9. (7) when thou, etc., better, "and thou hast not known," etc.; however long you may be with the foolish man you will get nothing but folly from him. (8) understand his way carefully studying it, and considering what may be for the best. deceit, prob. self-deceit. Or, "the folly, not the wisdom, of fools is shown in their ceaseless effort to deceive." (9) Fools . . sin, some trans. "The sin-offering of fools mocks them." The expiatory sacrifice wh. ungodly fools offer to God is utterly useless, as it does not gain the favor of God.— Zöckler. favour, R. V., "good will."

"We often speak of retribution as if it always lay beyond the grave, and the day of grace as extending through the whole life of man; but such is not the fact. Retribution begins with many men here. The day of grace terminates with many men before the day of death. There are those who reach an unconvertible state, their characters are stereotyped and fixed as eternity. The things that belong to their peace are hid from their eyes. They are incorrigible."—David Thomas.

a Comp. prov. "Nothing costs nothing, but brings nothing in."

b "Labor has its rough, unpleasant side, yet it ends in profit."—Spk. Com.

"The toil and the increase go together; the labor must come before the wealth, whether in relation to the body, the soul, or the spirit." — Hom. Com.

c Ex. xx. 16; xxiii. 1; Pr. vi. 19; xii. 17. Unfaithfulness in witnesses is one of the most serious difficulties felt in Eastern law courts.

"The bearing of this prob. is plainly directed against that superficial, trivial, seeming culture of the scoffers at religion (who, in the perverted sense of the word, are the enlightened), wh. lacks all genuine earnestness, and for that very reason all really deep knowledge and discernment." — Zöckler.

Pr. viii. 9; Jno vii. 17; Ja. i. 5, 6.

"He that comes to seek after knowledge with a mind to scorn and censure, shall be sure to find enough for his humor, but none for his instruction."—Lord Bacon.

Beware of the foolish (vs. 7).— I. Or you may be classed with him. II. When you find him incorrigible. III. For you may excite him to greater folly. IV. Because folly is contagious. V. He may harm you. VI. You do him too much honor.— Stems and Twigs.— True wisdom (vs. 8).— I. The wisdom of some is to understand things which cannot be understood. II. The wisdom of others is to pry into things which, if understood, are of little or no use. III. Of others to understand the way of other men. IV. Our highest wisdom is to understand our own way through life to the heavenly home. — Fuller.

Mr. Wilmer.— Dr. Doddridge mentions in one of his letters that Mr. Wilmer, the eldest son of the then (1743) Member of Parliament for Northampton, died a few days before of a fright. He had been drinking the devil's health, with a profane debauchee, the son of a baronet, who was his intimate companion, and who, to try the young hero's courage, placed a servant under the bed, who first lifted it up, and then came out in some disguise with a noise, which shocked the wretched youth to such a degree that he never recovered from it. "Fools make a mock of sin," but they find, after all, that its "wages" is "death." — R. T. S.

"With regard to evil companions it has been said, 'One rotten apple will infect the store.' If I have found any good companions, I will cherish them as the choicest of men. If I have any bad ones I will study to lose them, lest by keeping them I lose myself in the end." — Feltham.

"Of all thieves fools are the worst; they rob you of time and temper." — Goethe.

10, 11. (10) own bitterness, i. e. "Men learn by experience the bitterness of suffering, better than anyone can tell them."[a] — Stuart. (11) house, wh. seems firmly established is contrasted with the tabernacle or tent, wh. seems so slight and unstable, comp. xii. 15; xvi. 25. flourish, ref. to the strength, vigor and increase of the family of the righteous.

The solitude of the soul. — I. We should feel a kind of awe in the presence of the humblest, the poorest, the most commonplace of mankind. II. How uncertain our judgments are concerning the moral character of men. III. Our ignorance of each other's life should teach us the right value of the good opinion of men. IV. We should care supremely for God's judgment of our character, and rely upon His support, etc. V. God's perfect knowledge makes His sympathy with us perfect. — Dale.

Desaugiers. — Few authors could be mentioned who had the reputation of being such entertaining companions as Desaugiers; no one could enliven a company of friends, or set the table in a roar like him. There is not one of his songs which does not breathe the most lively and most unfettered gaiety; and as to the figure of Desaugiers, it seemed the most complete type of the happiest man upon the face of the earth. Always singing, always laughing, the countenance of Desaugiers seemed to defy the attacks of sorrow; his whole life appeared to be spent in the midst of a continual feast. And yet Desaugiers was sad; melancholy overwhelmed his heart in his most joyous festivals, and amidst his most mirthful songs; if he celebrated so much the pleasures of wine, it was because he sought in it the forgetfulness of that gnawing grief which he concealed from every eye and would have wished to conceal even from himself.—Whitecross.

Solitude. —

Yes! in the sea of life enisled.
With echoing straits between us thrown,
Dotting the shoreless watery wild,
We mortal millions live alone.
The islands feel the enclasping flow,
And then their endless bounds they know.
— Matthew Arnold.

"Each mind possesses in its interior mansions a solemn retired apartment, peculiarly its own, into wh. none but himself and the Deity can enter."— Foster.

"Within the range of human experience there is perhaps no expression of the ultimate solitude of each man's soul at all times, so striking in its truth and depth as this. Something there is in every sorrow, and in every joy, wh. no one else can share." — Spk. Com.

1 Cor. ii. 11.

"Not e'en the dearest heart, and nearest to our own, Knows half the reasons why we smile or sigh."

"Impatient soul and murmuring heart,
Your murmuring cease and bear your part."

12—14. (12) a way, plainly the way of wilfulness and self-indulgence.[b] seemeth right, according to the man's ideas, not is right according to the law of God. ways of death, surely lead down to moral ruin. (13) in laughter, i. e. often in circumstances producing a superficial joyousness, there is often an underlying profounder sorrow. But the reference is better confined to the mirth of the foolish and self-willed. (14) backslider, one who falls away from God and God-fearing. in heart, this may come to pass before there are wrong-doings in the life.[c] But God knoweth the heart, and will be sure to bring on the man the bitter fruitage of his sin. good . . self, better, "a good man shall be filled from himself," i. e. from the holy thoughts and actions in which he delights. So the backslider and the good man shall each be filled with his own ways.

[a] Pr. i. 31. xii. 14.

[b] Pr. xvi. 2.

[c] "Backsliding begins in the heart; it is the evil heart of unbelief that departs fr. God; and of all sinners backsliders will have most terror when they reflect on their own ways."— Matt. Henry.

"A long laugh naturally fills the eyes with tears and dies away in a sigh of weariness. Further, a season of undue elation is usually followed by one of depression. The mind rebounds from glee to gloom by natural reaction."—Pul. Com.

"As he that makes a bridge of his own shadow cannot but fall into the water, so neither can he escape the pit of hell who lays his own presumption in the place of God's promise."—Trapp.

"Bow to no patron's insolence; rely on no frail hopes; in freedom live and die."—Seneca

The backslider (vs. 14). — 1. Backsliding has its seat and source in the heart. II. It may be ascribed to various causes. III. It may be checked by a remembrance of former attainments, by a sense of present unhappiness, by an anticipation of future judgments. — Brooks.

His portion. — "He shall be filled with his own ways." Retribution will flow from both his past and present character. The remembrance of what he once was will embitter the present. To think of what might have been is in itself a hell when a man feels that by his own act he is now far lower in the moral scale than he once was. How it must embitter the misery of the fallen angels to remember that they once stood sinless before God's throne, and, but for their own act, would stand there still. In one of the writings of Lucian, he represents the ghost of a man who has left the world coming up for judgment before the bar of Rhadamanthus. He had lived so depraved a life that his judge exclaims that a new punishment is needed that will be in some degree adequate to his unparalleled villainy. A poor cobbler, standing by, suggests that it will be enough if the cup of Lethe, which was supposed to obliterate all remembrance of the past, and which each shade was permitted to drink as he passed from the dread tribunal, should, in this instance, be withheld. And the criminal was therefore condemned to remember forever what he had done in life, and this was held to be retribution sufficient for the worst of crimes. And if this is true of every wicked man, surely to be filled with the remembrance of what he once was will be the bitterest cup that can be the portion of every backslider. — Hom. Com.

15—17. (15) simple, in the bad sense; the simpleton, ch i. 22. He is credulous, does not give due heed, so is easily deceived. looketh well, pondereth, considereth, formeth good and wise judgments.[a] "Looks before he leaps." (16) feareth, suspecteth danger. rageth, etc., acts proudly and conceitedly; rushes recklessly forward into mischief. confident, in his own opinion. (17) soon angry, hastily angry.[b] foolishly, gets himself into many and needless troubles. wicked devices, who deliberately plots and plans evil. hated, surely gains the enmity of those whom he seeks to injure. The hasty sinner and the deliberate transgressor are in this vs. set over against each other.

Credulity. — I. Observe the nature of credulity. 1. It springs from mental weakness; 2. It is favored by prejudice; 3. It is increased by fear. II. Consider the evil of credulity. 1. It dishonors truth; 2. It tempts to fatal acts. III. Note the remedy of credulity. 1. This is not to be found in unlimited skepticism; 2. Unbelief is not the remedy; 3. The remedy lies in well-grounded faith. — Pul. Com.

Wise and foolish. — A wise man knows that the enemy is strong, and that his own defenses are feeble. His policy therefore is, not to brave danger, but to keep out of harm's way. The fool's character is mainly made up of two features; he thinks little of danger and much of himself. He stumbles on both sides alike. That which is strong he despises, and that which is weak he trusts. The dangers that beset him are great, but he counts them as nothing; the strength that is in him is as nothing, but he counts it great. Thus he is on all hands out of his reckoning, and stumbles at every step. — Arnot.

Fear a religious principle. — The beginning of religion in the heart is a subject of curious inquiry and of great practical importance. There is no sufficient reason for supposing that it is in all men alike; we have no rule for saying that religion must either necessarily, or that it does usually, proceed from the same cause. Different men are affected by different motives; and what sinks deep into the heart of one makes little impression upon another. . . Thus it is that religion sometimes, not seldom indeed, has a violent origin in the soul, and begins in terror: "A wise man feareth and departeth from evil." — Paley.

"A man should so act as to take advantage of another's folly."—Cicero.

"Men may live fools, but fools they cannot die."—Young.

18, 19. (18) inherit, the credulous simpleton falls naturally into possession of folly. crowned with, make a diadem of knowl. (19) bow before, etc., "however triumphant for a time and apparently prosperous the wicked may be, their success is not lasting: they shall in the end succumb to the righteous, even as the Canaanite kings crouched before Joshua's captains (Josh. x. 24)." at the gates, as if they were suppliant beggars.[c]

Volney. — Volney, the infidel, while prosecuting his philosophical discoveries in North America, had taken a passage, with about twenty other per-

[a] Pr. xxii. 3.

[b] "Foams up quickly, flies into passion."—Zöckler.

"Listen to one of the greatest of Englishmen, when he bears testimony that 'the ablest men that ever were born all had an openness and frankness of dealing, and a name of certainty and veracity.' There is a fine line between the wisdom of reserve and the vicious cunning of concealment; nothing but the loving and true purpose of the heart can redeem any habit of secrecy from odium."—Johnson.

[c] "How did the 250 souls bow before Paul, the prisoner, amidst the dangers of the storm on the Adriatic sea! He became the moral commander of all on board as the sons, in a vessel from one part of Lake Ontario to another. He was very communicative, allowed no opportunity to escape of ridiculing Christianity, and behaved altogether in a very profane manner. In the course of the voyage, a tremendous storm came on: the schooner struck upon a shoal or rock at a considerable distance from an inaccessible shore, and continued to beat so violently that they expected every moment that she would go to pieces, in which case their destruction would have been inevitable. In this awful situation the vain philosopher literally lost all the powers of reason. One moment he was quite frantic, and raged like a madman; another, in wild consternation, he looked into some of Voltaire's works, which he generally carried in his bosom; then despair took hold on him, and he uttered the most incoherent expressions, and offered a large sum of money to the captain, to prevail on him to attempt what was utterly impossible, namely, to put him ashore in a small boat. In all his misery he had a companion in the cook, who lashed himself to the foremast, and then, in the greatest agony of despair, uttered the most horrid imprecations. The vessel held together in that situation for above two hours, when the wind shifted about, and they got off, and arrived safely at the place of their destination. After the storm Volney showed himself no less weak, in requesting several of the passengers not to mention his behavior on this awful occasion. — R. T. S. — Evil bowing before good. — At one time or other, in one respect or other, the ungodly serve and crouch to the godly. Sometimes they that fear the Lord are lifted up to honor, and then the evil men bow themselves before them. Sometimes, again, the righteous wax rich through God's blessing on their labors, and then come the wicked to their gates for alms and relief. Not only the poor ones, but the great ones, who yet are wicked ones, seek and sue now and then with all submission to the godly for their counsel and help. And I cannot tell how, but such a majesty there is in the godly oftentimes, that most desperately wicked men reverence their faces, and are silent or courteous in their presence. — Muffet.

perils thickened around them." — Dav. Thomas.

"The amount of spiritual longing in the world — in the hearts of unnumbered thousands of men and women in whom we should never suspect it, among the wise and thoughtful, among the young and gay who seldom assuage and never betray their thirst — this is one of the most wonderful and touching parts of life." — Henry Drummond.

"The wicked serve the righteous; and whether they do it knowingly, they do it wholly, and through eternal ages." — Miller.

20, 21. (20) hated, repelled as disagreeable, obnoxious, troublesome.[a] Comp., however, vs. 21. rich . . friends, Heb. "many are the lovers of the rich;" partly satirical. Many are those willing to profess friendship for the sake of gain. (21) despiseth . . sinneth, whether he be poor or rich, our neighbor should be to us an object of interest and love. mercy . . poor, R. V., "pity," comp. vs. 20, for the contrast[b] happy is he, finding for himself how charity is twice blessed; it blesses him who gives and him who takes.

Love of riches. — The bees were haunting the flowering trees in crowds, humming among the branches, and gathering honey in the flowers. Said Gotthold, "Here is an image of temporal prosperity. So long as there is blossom on the trees, and honey in the blossom, the bees will frequent them in crowds, and fill the place with their music; but when the blossom is over, and the honey gone, they too will disappear." Temporal gain is the world's honey, and the allurement with which you may entice it whithersoever you will: but where the gain terminates, there likewise do the love and friendship of the world stop. — Hom. Com. — Care for poor. — The money we spend upon our own pleasures, and to promote our own interests, is spent and gone; but the money given with an open hand to those poor children of God, to whom it is strictly due, is not spent at all, but laid up in the most secure of banks. There is no source of joy in this present world to be compared with the loving gratitude of the poor whom you have lovingly helped. Strangely enough, men will spend much to obtain a title which carries no honor with it, forgetting that the same money given to the needy and the suffering purchases the true honor, which gives the noblest title. For we are none of us so stupid as to think that the empty admiration of the crowd is so rich in blessing as the heartfelt love of the few. — Exp. Bib.

a "Few maxims in the book jar so upon our feelings as this, and yet it does but represent the generalization of a wide experience. We seem to hear what worldly moralizers have repeated in a hundred forms." — Spk. Com.

b "A beneficent person is like a fountain watering the earth, and spreading fertility; it is therefore more delightful and more honorable to give than to receive." — Epicurus.

"Through the gate of beneficence doth the charitable man enter into the city of peace. . . . God makes some rich to help the poor; and suffers some poor to try the rich." — T. Adams.

22, 23. (22) err, i. e. wander fr. the ways of righteousness. devise, in their minds. Wickedness of heart surely finds its expression in wicked, wandering ways. The word used lit. means carve out. mercy and truth, God's manifestations of Himself to them. (23) labour, diligent activity.[c] "Every sort of doing is attended with profit; but lip-doings are rewarded by want." — Stuart. talk of the lips, talk, and nothing else; talk that is not associated with work.[d]

Cyrus a gardener. — When Lysander, a Lacedemonian general, brought mag-c "It is only by labor that thought can be made healthy, and the two cannot be separated with impunity." — Ruskin.

d "He that is lavish in words is a nignificent presents to Cyrus, he was shown, and much admired the royal gardens. Cyrus told him in answer to his inquiries, that he had himself drawn and entirely marked out the plan of the gardens, and had planted many of the trees with his own hands. "What," exclaimed Lysander, with astonishment, and viewing Cyrus from head to foot, "is it possible that, with those purple robes and splendid vestments, those strings of jewels and bracelets of gold, those buskins so richly embroidered, — is it possible that you could play the gardener, and employ your royal hands in planting trees?" "Does that surprise you?" said Cyrus: "I assure you that, when my health permits, I never sit down to my table without having fatigued myself either in military exercise, rural labor, or some other toilsome employment, to which I apply myself with pleasure." Lysander, still more amazed, pressed Cyrus by the hand, and said, "You are truly happy, and deserve your high fortune, since you unite it with virtue."

gard in deeds. The shuttle, the needle, the spade, the brush, the chisel, all are still but the tongue." — Sir W. Raleigh.

"The idle man is the devil's cushion." — Bishop Hall.

"To be truly and really independent, is to support ourselves by our own exertions." — Porter.

"He that labors is tempted by one devil; he that is idle by a thousand." — Italian Proverb.

"Let the lowliest task be mine, Grateful, so the work be thine." — Whittier.

"The path of sin is much more easily avoided than relinquished We can far more easily keep out of the course of the stream than stem the torrent." — Bridges.

Labor. —

Get leave to work
In this world — 'tis the best you get at all;
For God, in cursing gives us better gifts
Than man in benediction. God says "Sweat
For foreheads," men say "Crowns," and so we are crowned,
Ay, gashed by some tormenting circle of steel
Which snaps with a secret spring. Get work, get work;
Be sure 'tis better than what you work to get.
. . . . . .
Be sure, no earnest work
Of any honest creature, howbeit weak,
Imperfect, ill-adapted, fails so much,
It is not gathered as a grain of sand,
To enlarge the sum of human action used For carrying out God's end. — Mrs. Browning.

24. crown . . riches, riches are an ornament to a wise man; they enhance and set off his wisdom in the eyes of others, enable him to use it to advantage, and are not the snare which they might be because they are employed religiously and profitably for the good of others. But the foolishness of fools is (only) folly, that is even though it were accompanied with riches. Decorate folly as you may, trick it out out in gaud and ornament, it is still nothing but folly.[a] — Pul. Com.

"As a horse is of no use without the bridle, so are riches without reason." Cawdray.

"Nothing hides a blemish so completely as cloth of gold." — Hare.

A rich fool. —

Thee, senseless stock, because thou'rt richly gilt
The blinded people without cause admire,
And superstition impiously hath built
Altars to that which should have been the fire.

Where shall my tongue consent to worship thee,
Since all's not gold that glisters and is fair?
Carving but makes an image of a tree;
But gods of images are made by prayer.

Sabean incense, in a fragrant cloud
Illustriously suspended o'er thy crown
Like a king's canopy, makes thee allow'd
For more than man. But let them take thee down,
And thy true value be once understood,
Thy dull idolators will find thou'rt wood. — Fanshawe.

25—27. (25) true witness, vs. 5. delivereth souls, saves those who are in danger by false accusation — saves lives. speaketh lies, and thereby endangers lives.[b] (26) strong confidence, or sense of security. They have God on their side.[c] his children, children of the good man whose personality is implied in this first part of the vs. (27) fountain, etc., ch. xiii. 14; also x. 11.

The source of true confidence (vs. 26). — I. In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence. 1. Fear of God includes inward and outward religion; 2. Such religion inspires the soul with confidence; 3. With confidence at all times, [a] "Why, was it not foolishness before they were rich? Yes, but now it has become egregious foolishness." — Trapp.

[b] "It is prob. that the intended antithesis relates not so much to the actual fact of truth saving and falsehood condemning, as to the dispositions and intentions of the faithful witness on the one hand, and the lying witness on the other. The faithful witness delights in giving testimony that will save life, that will be salutary, beneficial to his fellow-creatures." — Quoted by Dav. Thomas.

[c] "Creature extremity can never poverty, sickness, persecution, temptation, etc. II. And His children have a place of refuge. 1. Here in the mercy and favor of God; 2. Hereafter in the heavenly world. — Sigma in 400 Sks.

Fear of God. — It is not a servile fear; the worshiper is not a croucher, waiting in an abject position in order to be noticed by a tyrannical despot; fear means reverence, veneration, awe, a sense of the grandeur and majesty of the Lord, not only as that term stands for infinity, brilliance, and attributes of an intellectual kind, but as it stands for holiness, truth, purity, justice, and every expression that indicates moral supremacy. He who fears the Lord is strong in the confidence of ultimate justice; he is confident also in the final exposition of Providence, being assured that the way of God to man will be so revealed at last that it will be seen to have been the right way, the only true way, notwithstanding the varieties of the road, the steep hills, the bleak deserts, the stony paths, the cold rivers that had to be crossed in the dark night, the afflictions that had to be endured when heart and flesh had failed and strength had been exhausted, — at the last it will be seen that God has not given one stroke too much, taken away one treasure too many, or dug one grave too deep; the righteous will be the first to confess that God has done all things wisely, well, and lovingly. — J. Parker.

reach beyond the help of omnipotence."—Nicholls.

"A beautiful expression is 'His children.' Here in the very midst of the Proverbs, a book of merely sententious maxims it might be thought, we find the sublime doctrine of the fatherhood of God."—J. Parker.

"I do not know what is before me, but I know Who is behind me."

"Christ is not valued at all unless He be valued above all." — St. Augustine.

28, 29. (28) multitude of people, in contrast with mere pomp, conquest or gorgeous array. The true glory is a numerous, prosperous, and happy people.[a] honour, R. V., "glory." (29) slow to wrath,[b] not suddenly roused to passion, able to command his own spirit. hasty of spirit, Heb. short of spirit.[c] exalteth folly, i. e flaunts in the eyes of men, makes plain exposure of it, by giving passion the throne and sceptre, and placing the soul under her capricious and violent dominion.

Slow to wrath. —Giacomo Benincasa, the father of that fairest of pre-Reformation saints, St. Catherine of Sienna, was a just and upright man, ruling his spirit in the fear of God, and with a temper as even as a calm. If he saw any of his household vexed and jarred, he would say cheerfully, "Now then, don't put yourself out, or give way to unkindness, and God will bless you." And once when brought to the brink of ruin by an enemy, he still preserved his sweetness of spirit, and would calm his wife's complaints by saying, "Let him alone, dear; let him alone, and God will bless you, and show him his error." — Anec. Illus of O. T. — Sir Isaac Newton and his dog. — Sir Isaac Newton's temper, it is said, was so equal and mild, that no accident could disturb it; a remarkable instance of which is related as follows: Sir Isaac had a favorite little dog, which he called Diamond. Being one evening called out of his study into the next room, Diamond was left behind. When Sir Isaac returned, having been absent but a few minutes, he had the mortification to find that Diamond had overturned a lighted candle among some papers, the nearly finished labor of many years, which were soon in flames, and almost consumed to ashes. This loss, from Newton's advanced age, was irreparable; but, without at all punishing the dog, he exclaimed, "Oh, Diamond, Diamond, you little know the mischief you have done!" — R. T. S.

a "This is the teaching of a true political economy." — Fausset.

"It is the wisdom of princes, by a mild and gentle government, by encouraging trade and husbandry, and by making all easy under them, to promote the increase of their people."—Matt. Henry.

b Nu. xii. 3; 1 Pe. ii. 21-23.

c Matt. v. 22; Eph. iv. 26, 27.

"Wise anger is like fire from the flint, there is a great ado to bring it out; and when it does come, it is out again immediately."—Henry.

30. sound heart, LXX, "The man of gentle mind is the physician of the heart," "one in wh. all emotions and appetites are in a healthy equilibrium. The contrast with this is the envy[d] wh. eats, like a consuming disease, into the very bones and marrow of a man's moral life." — Spk. Com.

Envy destructive. — When a statue had been erected by his fellow-citizens of Thasos, to Theogenes, a celebrated victor in one of the public games of Greece, we are told that it excited so strongly the envious hatred of one of his rivals, that he went to it every night, and endeavored to throw it down by repeated blows, till, at last, unfortunately successful, he was able to move it from its pedestal, and was crushed to death beneath it on its fall. This, if we consider the self-consuming misery of envy, is truly what happens to every envious man. He may, perhaps, throw down his rival's glory; but he is crushed in his whole soul beneath the glory which he overturned.—Brown. — True happiness. — The Nile, contrary to the analogy of other great streams, flows more than a thousand miles without receiving the waters of a single tributary; the consequence is, that it grows no greater as it courses over that vast line. Other rivers are ever now and then receiving converging streams from the right and left, and thereby their volume continually increases until it reaches the sea. The happiness of man is like the flow of water in a river.

d Ja. iii. 16.

"A fretful, envious, discontented spirit is its own punishment; it consumes the flesh, preys upon the animal spirits, makes the countenance pale, and is the rottenness of the bones."—Matt. Henry.

"Socrates called envy the soul's saw; and wished that envious men had more eyes and

If you enjoy nothing but what is your own, your tiny rivulet of contentment, so far from increasing, grows smaller by degrees, until it sinks unseen into the sand, and leaves you in a desert of despair; but when all the acquisitions of your neighbors go to swell its bulk, your enjoyment will flow like a river enriched by many affluents, growing ever greater as life approaches its close. It is some such river that makes glad the city of God. — Arnot.

31. oppresseth, comp. term "mocketh" in ch. xvii. 5. All kinds of injuries done to the poor are included: all forms in which positions of power and authority are used for unjust, tyrannical, or unbrotherly ends. his Maker, i. e. the Maker of the poor; regarded as having appointed his lot.[a] honoureth . . poor, better read, "He that hath mercy on the poor[b] honoreth Him," i. e. God: "for he shows that he has proper regard to God's ordinance, acts on high motives, and is not led astray by wordly considerations."

Godliness and inhumanity (vs. 31).— Godliness and humanity are essentially one. The text teaches — I. That inhumanity is ungodliness. Oppression of the poor is a reproach of God — 1. By disregarding that identity of nature with which our Maker has endowed all classes; 2. By disregarding those laws which our Maker has enjoined respecting the poor. II. True humanity is godliness. — Thomas.

Humanity. — When the Romans had ravaged the province of Azazane, and 7,000 Persians were brought to Armida, where they suffered extreme want, Acases, the bishop of that city, observed, that as God said, "I love mercy better than sacrifice," He would certainly be better pleased with the relief of His suffering creatures, than with being served with gold and silver in their churches. The clergy were of the same opinion. The consecrated vessels were sold, and with the proceeds the 7,000 Persians were not only maintained during the war, but sent home at its conclusion with money in their pockets. Varenes, the Persian monarch, was so charmed with this humane action, that he invited the bishop to his capital, where he received him with the utmost reverence, and for his sake conferred many favors on the Christians. — Whitecross.

32. driven away, R. V., "thrust down" by a violent death.[c] in his wickedness, R. V., marg. "calamity," under wh. he collapses completely. hope . . death, of a gracious Div. presence and help.[d] The poetical parallelism of the verse is preserved by rendering "In his misfortune (or adversity) the wicked is overthrown, but the righteous has confidence even in his death." — Ruetschi. Even in the greatest danger the good man loses not his trust in God.

A contrast (vs. 32).— We have here two deaths. I. The death of the wicked. 1. In his wickedness, died as he lived, resolutions of amendment unfulfilled, not a death-bed penitent; 2. Driven away, compelled to go, notwithstanding all his reluctance; 3. Driven away in his wickedness. II. The death of the righteous. 1. He has hope in the Divine presence; 2. He has the hope of immediate admission into glory; 3. Of a blessed resurrection; 4. And of a glorious immortality. Note — (1) We must all die; (2) Death shall not wear the same aspect to all. — Brooks.

Hope in death.— Socrates, and some of the wiser heathen, comforted themselves against the fear of death with this weak cordial, that it is common to men, the way of all the earth. Hence it was, when the Athenians condemned Socrates to die, he received the sentence with an undaunted spirit, and told them that they did nothing but what nature had before ordained for him. But the Christian hath a greater ground for a holy resolution, and a stronger cordial against the fears of death, even the hope of eternal life; and surely, if he that exceeds others in his cordials be excelled by them in courage, he disgraceth his physician.— Swinnock.— Joy in death.— It is storied of Godfrey, Duke of Bouillon, that when, in his expedition to the Holy Land, he came within view of Jerusalem, his army, seeing the high turrets, goodly buildings, and fair fronts, being even transported, with the joyfulness of such a sight, gave a mighty shout that the earth was verily thought to ring with the noise thereof. Such is the rejoicing of a godly man in death, when he doth not see the turrets and towers of an earthly, but the spiritual building of a heavenly Jerusalem, and his soul ready to take possession of them. How doth he delight in his dissolution, when he sees grace changing into glory, hope into fruition, faith into vision, and love into perfect comprehension. — Spencer.

ears than others, that they might have the more torment by beholding and bearing other men's happiness." —Trapp.

a Matt. xxv. 40; also 1 Sa. ii. 8; Job xxxi. 13-15; Ps cxiii. 7; Pr. xxii. 2.

b Mat. xi. 5; xxvi. 11; Ja. ii. 5.

"True humanity consists not in a squeamish ear; it consists not in starting or shrinking at tales of misery, but in a disposition of heart to relieve it. True humanity appertains rather to the mind than to the nerves, and prompts men to use real and active endeavors to execute the actions which it suggests." — Charles James Fox.

"I am sick, not to death, but to life." — Myconius. "I am almost well." —Richard Baxter. "Mercy is triumphant." — Rice.

c Ps. xxxv. 5, 6; xxxvi. 12; lxii. 3; lxxiii. 18, 19.

d "The hope wh. abides even 'in death' must, like that of the Psalmist, look beyond it."—Spk. Com.

"I shall be the most glorious instance of sovereign grace in all heaven."—Thomas Walter.

"My hope is in the mercy of God through Jesus Christ." — Fisher Ames.

Bishop Hooper, to one that tendered a pardon upon recantation, said, "If you love my soul, away with it; if you love my soul away with it." One of the commissioners prayed him to consider that life is sweet and death is bitter. "True," said he, "but the death to come is more bitter, and the life to come is more sweet."

33. resteth, contrast with the words "made known" in the second clause. On these terms the point of the verse rests. In the one case wisdom is preserved in quietness and silence, without forwardness or boastfulness; in the other it is noisy and boastful. The half-learned are always the foremost to make show of their knowledge.[a] in the midst, R. V., "in the inward part."

Reticence and Loquacity (vs. 33).—I. Reticence is often a mark of wisdom, not always; sometimes a sign of stupidity, sometimes of sulkiness. Two things tend to this. 1. Humility; 2. Conscientiousness. II. Loquacity is even an indication of folly.—Thomas.

The Hidden Made Manifest.—In all natural life there is a law by which its hidden secrets are manifest in outward signs. The health of the root is seen in the health of the tree, and disease of the internal bodily organs manifests itself in the outward appearance. So it is with moral health and disease. However men may try to appear what they are not, the natural tendency of human nature often proves too strong for the artificial restraint that is put upon it, and sooner or later men reveal what they really are. "That which is in the midst of moral fools is made known," although time is needed for the folly fully to develop itself.—Hom. Com.

34, 35. (34) Righteousness, a designedly comprehensive word, meaning all just principles and actions. "Religious and moral rectitude in every relation and direction."[a] exalteth, i. e. it involves, and leads to, a general elevation and advancement of the condition of the people. (35) wise, in sense of discreet, statesmanlike. Thus Joseph was advanced to the highest post in Egypt, owing to the wisdom which he displayed; so, too, in the case of Daniel.[b] causeth shame, or doeth shamefully.

The Political and Social Importance of Moralty (vss. 34, 35).—I. The political importance of morality. 1. Rectitude exalts a nation, in material wealth, in social enjoyments, in moral power; 2. Unrighteousness degrades a nation. II. The social importance of morality. 1. Men who are ruled by righteousness are the men most to be valued in a country; 2. The promotion of true morality is the best way to promote the interests of a State.—Thomas.

National Righteousness.—Morality has not yet been sufficiently applied to politics. It is forgotten that the ten commandments relate to communities as well as to individuals, because they are based on the eternal and all-embracing principles of righteousness. Men have yet to learn that that which is wrong in the individual is wrong in the society. Nations make war on one another for reasons which would never justify individual men in fighting a duel. Yet if it is wrong for a man to steal a field, it must be wrong for a nation to steal a province; and if an individual man may not cut his neighbor's throat out of revenge without being punished as a criminal, there is nothing to justify a whole community in shooting down thousands of people for no better motive. If selfishness even is sinful in one man, selfishness cannot be virtuous in thirty millions of people. The reign of righteousness must govern public and national movements if the will of God is to be respected.—Pul. Com.

A State.—
What constitutes a State?
Not high-raised battlements, or labored mound,
Thick wall or moated gate;
Not cities proud, with spires and turrets crowned,
Nor bays and broad-armed ports,
Where, laughing at the storm, rich navies ride;
Nor starred and spangled courts,
Where low-browed baseness wafts perfume to pride.
No! men,—high-minded men.—Jones.

a "Fools carry their wisdom, wh. is, however, in fact only folly, always upon their tongues, and seek most assiduously to make it known. The expression is pointed and ironical, and yet not for that reason unintelligible."
—O. Zockler.

"Learn to hold thy tongue. Five words cost Zacharias forty weeks' silence."
—Fuller.

Hebrew adage says, "A vessel full of coins will make no noise; but if there be only one coin in it, it will make a rattle."

a A righteous administration of the government; impartial equity between man and man; public countenance given to religion; the general practice and profession of virtue; the protecting and preserving of virtuous men; charity and compassion to strangers,—these exalt a nation, uphold the throne, and elevate the people.

b Da. vi. 1—3; Mat. xxv. 21; Luke xii. 37.

"Whatever is morally wrong cannot be politically right."
—Burke.

"Surely well is favor bestowed, where it reflecteth unto the giver's honor: worthily is favor received, where wisdom's hands are the receivers of it."—Jermin.

CHAPTER THE FIFTEENTH.

1, 2. (1) soft, gentle, soothing, quieting.[a] turneth, etc., or beateth down, so as to damp and put out the fires. grievous, or irritating: including passionate and spiteful words. "Rather than lose a jest some will lose a "Therefore be not sullen and silent, but give an answer, and let it be a gentle one." — Lord Bacon.

Ju. viii. 1—3; contrast xii. 1—3.

a friend." (2) aright, i. e. in attractive and useful ways. poureth forth, or "bubbleth" out in a way that disgusts those who listen.

3. eyes .. place, so we may associate the immediate Divine approval, or disapproval, with all our words and works.[a] beholding, taking note; watching fr. a high place.[b]

Omniscience (vs. 3).—I. God's inspection is thorough. 1. He sees the thoughts; 2. He appreciates the motives. II. God's inspection is universal. 1. No hiding-place from His eyes; 2. No escape from His notice. III. God's inspection is personal. 1. The good shall be encouraged; 2. The sinner should take warning; 3. All should be circumspect.—Whythe.

One May Forget.—A man who was in the habit of going to a neighbor's corn-field to steal the grain, one day took his son with him, a boy eight years of age. The father told him to hold the bag, while he looked if any one was near to see him. After standing on the fence, and peeping through all the corn-rows, he returned to take the bag from the child, and began his sinful work. "Father," said the boy, "you forgot to look somewhere else." The man dropped the bag in a fright, and said, "Which way, child?" supposing he had seen someone. "You forgot to look up to the sky, to see if God was noticing you." The father felt this reproof of the child so much, that he left the corn, returned home, and never again ventured to steal; remembering the truth his child had taught him, that the eye of God always beholds us.—R. T. S.

4, 5. (4) wholesome tongue,[c] one that soothes and heals with pacifying and gentle language. Comp. term "sound" in ch. xiv. 30. tree of life, see ch. iii. 18, xi. 30. perverseness, i. e. cross, ill-natured, irritating language. breach, etc.,[d] it makes a breach; it grieves instead of appeasing. Stuart translates, "is a crushing of spirit." (5) A fool, Ps. xiv. 1. despiseth, etc., ch. x. 1. is prudent, R. V., "getteth prudence." Stuart, "shall become wary," acts discreetly. Exactly what the fool does not do.

Speech of the Wise and of the Foolish (vss. 4, 7).—I. The speech of the wise—1. Is healing; 2. Living; 3. Enlightening. II. The speech of the foolish—1. Is wounding; 2. Empty.—Thomas.

A Wholesome Tongue.—Not a silent tongue; mere abstinence from evil is not good. Idleness is evil under the administration of God. Not a smooth tongue: it may be soft on the surface, while the poison of asps lies cherished underneath. The serpent licks his victim all over before he swallows it. Smoothness is not an equivalent for truth. Not a voluble tongue; that active member may labor much to little purpose. Not a sharp tongue: some instruments are made keen-edged for the purpose of wounding. Not even a true tongue. Truth is necessary, but it is not enough. The true tongue must also be wholesome. Before anything can be wholesome in its effects on others it must be whole in itself. "Winged words" have fluttered about in poetry and prose through all the languages of the civilized world from old Homer's day till now. The permanence and prevalency of the expression proves that it embodies a recognized truth. Words have wings indeed, but they are the wings of seeds rather than of birds or butterflies. We are all accustomed in autumn to observe multitudes of diminitive seeds, each balanced on its own tiny wing, floating past on the breeze. Words are like these seeds, in their winged character, their measureless multitude, and their winged speed. They drop off in inconceivable numbers: they fly far: they are widely spread. It is of deep importance that they should be for good, and not for evil. The tongue is a prolific tree, it concerns the whole community that it should be a tree of life, and not of death.—Arnot.

6, 7. (6) much treasure, "the treasure stored up in such a house is the righteousness that prevails in it, a source and pledge of abiding prosperity." revenues .. trouble, i. e. "great revenues acquired by wrong, or expended badly bring trouble, vexation, and ruin upon a man and his family."—Pul. Com. (7) disperse, Rucetschi suggests the rendering, "sift or winnow knowledge," separating the chaff from the grain. They have the true critical spirit. not so,[b] a simple declaration of contrast. An expressive suggestion of the mighty difference between the influences that go forth from the wise man and from the fool.

True and False Gains.—I. A man may be poor, yet possess all things. (2 Cor. vi. 10). Deus meus, et omnia! II. A man may be rich, yet destitute, poor, blind, and miserable. If we are not satisfied, we are not rich.

[a] "So live with men as considering always that God sees thee. Do nothing which thou wouldest not have God see done" — Bp. Henshaw.

2 Chr. xvi. 9; Ps. cxxxix. 1; Mat. x. 30; He. iv. 13.

[b] Comp. the different tone of Mat. v. 45.

[c] "Including the ideas of 'tranquil' and 'placable.'"—Spk. Com.

[d] "Disturbance and destruction by restless passion of the regulated and normal state of the spirit. See Is. lxv. 14.
—O. Zockler.

"By directing a child's attention to a fault, and thus giving it a local habitation and a name, you may often fix it in him more firmly; when, by drawing his thoughts and affections to other things, and seeking to foster an opposite grace you would be much more likely to subdue it. In like manner a jealous disposition is often strengthened when notice is taken of it, while the endeavor to cherish a spirit of love would do much toward casting it out."
—Hare.

"Too often there is guilt and a curse; there is pride and passion, and envy, and contention, and those are troublesome lusts, which rob them of the joy of their revenues, and make them troublesome to their neighbors."
—Mat. Henry.

[b] Not sound, not right.

If we are content, we are never poor. III. God is the true and only gain of the soul. We have a nature which will be satisfied with nothing short of the Infinite. To attempt to feed it with anything less is found to be a cheat and a self-delusion.—Johnson.

Cato and Marius Curius.—Cato, a pattern of moderation, was very early taught the happy art of contentment by the following circumstance: Near his country seat was a cottage, formerly belonging to Marius Curius, who was thrice honored with a triumph. Cato often walked thither, and reflecting on the smallness of the farm and the meanness of the dwelling, used to meditate on the peculiar virtues of the man who, though he was the most illustrious character in Rome, had subdued the fiercest nations, and driven Pyrrhus out of Italy, cultivated this little spot of ground with his own hands, and after three triumphs retired to his own cottage. Here the ambassadors of the Samnites found him in the chimney-corner dressing turnips, and offered him a large present of gold; but he absolutely refused it, remarking, "A man who can be satisfied with such a supper, has no need of gold; and I think it more glorious to conquer the possessors of it, than to possess it myself." Full of these thoughts, Cato returned home; and taking a view of his own estate, his servants, and his manner of life, increased his labor and retrenched his expenses.—Cheever.

8, 9. (8) abomination, etc.,[a] bec. however costly the sacrifice may be, it is only a thing, and God accepts the heartfelt prayer unaccompanied by any gift in preference to any sacrifice.[b] "The lesson was needed that the value of sacrifice depended upon the mind and disposition of the offerer, the tendency being to rest in the opus operatum, as if the external action was all that was necessary to make the worshiper accepted."—Pul. Com. (9) way of the wicked,[c] the walk or conversation; the conduct so far as it is based on the wrong principle of serving self. loveth, etc., regardeth with favor, and giveth to such the sense of acceptance with Him. followeth after, searcheth after, pursueth; a term indicating earnestness and intensity.

Praying and Living.—I. God loves righteous men with a special love. II. One act of a righteous man which God regards with special pleasure. The prayer of the upright. 1. Because it is an expression of conscious need. 2. It is an expression of filial confidence. 3. It is an act of obedience. III. God abhors the way of the wicked. 1. Because they are at war with their better nature. 2. Because their ways are at war with His purpose to bless them. IV. Their acts of worship are especially displeasing to Him.—Hom. Com.

Hindrance to Prayer.—A man that is wounded may call upon the surgeon to have some ease of his pain, but if he will not endure to have the splinter or the arrow-head pulled out that sticketh fast in the flesh and causeth the grief, he may cry long enough, but all in vain; and if people pray to God to stay the fury of the burning, when a house is on fire, and themselves in the meantime pour on oil or throw on fuel, there will be but small hope of quenching the same. So there can be no comfortable return of our prayers unto God till sin be removed; it is but folly to seek unto God by prayer till the partition wall of sin that is betwixt us and Him be broken down. It is sin that crosses and hindereth the effect and fruit of prayer: like those heathen of whom the cynic made this observation, that they prayed indeed to their gods for health, but at the very same time, when they prayed, they used such excess as could not but greatly impair their health, and so wilfully deprived themselves of that they prayed for.—Spencer.

10, 11. (10) Correction, etc., R. V., "There is grievous correction," etc., i. e. so sharp as to be nothing less than physical and moral death. the way, that right way wh. God marks out for him. hateth reproof,[a] wh. might help to keep him in the way. (11) Hell, Heb. Sheol. De. xxxii. 22. destruction, R. V., Abaddon, the abyss, the place of the destroyer.[b] "Sheol is used generally as the place to which the souls of the dead are consigned—the receptacle of all departed spirits, whether good or bad. Abaddon is the lowest depth of hell, the 'abyss' of Luke viii. 31; Rev. ix. 2, etc.; xx. 1, etc."—Pul. Com. Comp. ch. xxvii. 20. God's eye penetrates even the remotest recesses of the unseen world. hearts, etc., wh. seemed to the writer an easier thing to sound and know than the depths of hell.[c]

"Many children grow up like plants under bell-glasses. They are surrounded only by artificial and prepared influences. The object of training is to teach the child to take care of himself; but many parents use their children only as a kind of spool on which to reel off their own experience; and they are bound and corded until they perish by inanity, or break all bonds and cords, and rush to ruin by reaction."
—Beecher.

[a] "Even the costly sacrifice of the wicked is abomination to the Lord, and even the prayer of the righteous, the breath of his lips (contrasted with the steam of the sumptuous sacrifice)—is His delight." —Burgon.

[b] 1 Sa. xv. 22; Isa. i. 11, lxvi. 3; Je. vi. 20.

[c] Ge. iv. 3—5; Is. xxix. 13, 14.

"When an ungodly man prays, it is not the act of prayer that constitutes the sin, it is the want of a praying heart. The sin is in him, not in his prayer."
—Wardlaw.

"When a lady once told Archbishop Sharpe that she would not communicate religious instruction to her children until they had attained the years of discretion, the shrewd prelate replied, 'Madam, if you do not teach them, the devil will!" —J. Whitecross.

[a] 2 Chr. xxv. 16.

[b] Job xxvi. 6; Ps. cxxxix. 8.

[c] "Our inward disposition is the life of our actions; according to that doth the God of spirits judge us, while men censure according to our external motions."

—Bp. Hall.

Je. xvii. 9, 10; 1 Jno. iii. 20.

"A child rightly brought up will be like a willow branch, which, broken off and touching the ground, at once takes root. Bring up your children so that they will root easily in their own soil, and not for ever be grafted into your old trunk and boughs." — H. W. Beecher.

The Principle of Judgment (vs. 10).—I. It is never causeless. II. The connection of cause and effect is often mysterious. Hence we should be slow to trace the judgment of God upon sinners. III. Some sins that foretell judgment. 1. Desertion of duty; forsaking of God's ways; traveling in paths we know to be crooked or unclean. 2. Indifference to rebuke. For even in error, if we will heed the timely warning and correct the discovered fault, judgment may be averted. If not, there is no way of avoiding the law of doom. The soul that sinneth shall and must die.—Johnson.

God's Knowledge of Men's Hearts.—This terrible truth these hearts secretly know, and their desperate writhings to shake it off show how much they dislike it. The Romish confessional is one of the most pregnant facts in the history of man. It is a monument and measure of the guilty creature's enmity against God. We have wondered at the blindness and stupidity of our common nature in permitting a man, not more holy than his neighbors, to stand in the place of God to a brother's soul. There is cause for grief, but not ground for surprise. The phenomenon proceeds in the way of natural law. It is the common, well understood process of compounding for the security of the whole, by the voluntary surrender of a part. The confessional is a kind of insurance office where periodical exposure of the heart to a man is the premium paid for fancied impunity in hiding that heart altogether from the deeper scrutiny of the all-seeing God.—Arnot.

12. scorner, Pr. i. 22. One in whom the habit of scorning is confirmed. "Scorners are conceited, arrogant persons, free-thinkers, indifferent to or sceptical of religion, and too self-opinionated to be open to advice or reproof." will he go, to seek fellowship with.[a] "With wise men he doth not associate."—Hitzig.

The Scorner (vs. 12).—I. He requires reproof—1. For his self-ignorance; 2. For his presumption. II. He shuns reproof. 1. He will not read books that will deal seriously and honestly with his character; 2. He will not attend a ministry that will expose his character in the broad light of eternal law; 3. He will not join the society that will deal truthfully with its members. III. He hates reproof.—Thomas.

The Swearer Reproved by a Child.—Some little children were sitting one day on the steps of a door singing, as they often do, some of their favorite hymns. They were suddenly surprised by a half-drunken man, who came up to them, and, uttering an oath, said, "Does your master teach you nothing but singing those foolish hymns?" "Yes," said a sharp little fellow, about six years of age, "He tells us it is wicked to swear." The poor worthless man seemed ashamed of his conduct, and passed on without further remark. The Scorner.—There is none that loveth more truly, that loveth more profitably, than he that lovingly reproveth what he seeth amiss. And yet there is none that a scorner loveth less. But what marvel if he loveth not another, that loveth not himself! Where scorning is, there can be no love, that was never love's disposition. Let no one that reproveth a scorner look for love from him.—Jermin.

13—15. (13) merry heart, ch. xvii. 22. cheerful, bright, pleasant. spirit is broken, lit. the breath is oppressed, made laborious: there is much sighing, and so the countenance is made gloomy and sad.[b] "Happiness is shown in the outward look, but sorrow has a deeper and more abiding influence; it touches the inner life, destroys the natural elasticity, creates despondency and despair." (14) heart .. knowledge, the gist of the verse is this: The wise grow ever wiser, the foolish become ever more foolish.[c] (15) afflicted, contrast vs. 13, those of a merry heart. Reference is not so much to distressing circumstances as to a depressed and desponding habit of mind. evil, by reason of anxious thought and forecasted misfortune. continual feast, "life to the cheerful is as one perpetual banquet, whether he be poor or rich."

Human Hearts (vss. 13—15).—I. Here is the merry and the mournful heart. 1. The merry heart is a radiance to the countenance and a feast to the soul; 2. The mournful heart breaks the spirit and curses the whole life. II. Here is the understanding and the foolish heart. 1. The one seeketh knowledge; 2. The other feedeth on foolishness.—Thomas.

The Effect of Sorrow Upon the Human Spirit.—It "breaks" it. When a vessel's timbers are shivered by the fury of the storm she may not go to [a] "A scorner is one that not only makes a jest of God and religion, but bids defiance to the methods employed for his conviction and reformation. We ought not only to bid the wise welcome when they come to us, but to go to them, as beggars to the rich man's door for an alms."

—Mat. Henry.

1 Ki. xxii. 8; Am. v. 10.

[b] "Emotions of joy and sorrow show themselves in outward look and act."—Spk. Com.

[c] "Avoid frivolous amusements, unprofitable reading, the profane wit, vain superstitions, curious speculations on subjects beyond the reach of the human mind; avoid seeking to be wise above what is written." — Nicholls.

"This word merriment is of frequent use among our old writers. It is Foxe's favorite description of the holy joy of the martyrs."

—Bridges.

pieces altogether. But she is no longer able to hold her own against the elements, which she could once use as forces to convey her from land to land. If she were now to put to sea, instead of riding over the waves and making them her servants, she would be a passive thing in their hands, a mere helpless bundle of timbers to be tossed whithersoever they pleased, instead of "walking the waters like a thing of life." So it is with the human spirit when the cross seas and angry winds of adverse circumstances have quenched the hope and paralyzed the energy that once governed and inspired the man. He is no longer able to face the storms of life, and outride them, or even make them advance his interests. He is passive amid the changes and chances of mortal life, and they drift him on wheresoever they will. But this can never be the case unless a man has lost faith in the character of God and his own high and immortal destiny. Then, indeed, the elements which he was built to rule will rule him, and he will fail to fulfil the end for which God launched him on the sea of life. —Hom Com.

16, 17. (16) little, a small portion of earthly goods. All possessions are proportionate to needs. The needs increase almost faster than the riches, so that the poor man's "little" is practically to him more than the rich man's "much."[a] and trouble,[b] i. e. the anxiety and solicitude wh. attend the acquirement and investment of riches. (17) dinner of herbs,[c] the meal of the poor man, who cannot afford meat: lit. "a portion of green;" i. e. vegetables. stalled ox, one tied up for fattening. Fatted oxen are holiday fare. Lu. xv. 23, 30. hatred, "such a feast is little worth if accompanied with feelings of hatred, jealousy, and ill will. This and the preceding verse emphasize and explain vs. 15."

Alternatives.—I. Poverty with piety, or riches with discontent. Which shall we choose? Naturally all, or nearly all, will prefer to take riches with its risks rather than poverty with its certain privations. Our Bible is precious because it reminds us that there is another side in this matter. Riches are too dearly gained at the expense of peace of conscience; poverty is blessed if it brings us nearer to God. II. Scanty fare with rich spiritual seasoning, or rich fare with a poor heart. Which? For ourselves and our personal comfort? For others and the hospitality we should like to dispense to them? For ourselves, high thinking with low living; for others, slight fare with large welcome will make a true feast.—Johnson.

Riches vs. Poverty.—It is not the great cage that makes the bird sing. It is not the great estate that brings always the inward joy—the cordial contentment. The little lark with a wing sees farther than the ox with a bigger eye, but without a wing. Birds use not to sing when they are on the ground, but when got into the air, or on tops of trees. If saints be sad, it is because they are too busy here below. If the bramble bear rule, fire will arise out of it that will consume the cedars; the lean kine will soon eat up the fat, and it shall not be seen by them. It is hard to handle these thorns hard and not to prick one's fingers. Riches, though well got, are but as manna; those that gathered less had no want, and those that gathered more, it was but a trouble and annoyance to them.—Trapp.——True Riches.—A missionary in India says, "I rode to Nallamaram, and saw some people of the congreation there, together with the catechist. The clothes of one of the women were rather dirty, and I asked her about it. 'Sir,' said she, 'I am a poor woman, and have only this single dress.' 'Well, have you always been so poor?' 'No, I had some money and jewels, but a year ago the Maravers (thieves) came and robbed me of all. They told me,' she said, 'If you will return to heathenism, we shall restore to you everything.' 'Well, why did you not follow their advice? Now you are a poor Christian.' 'O, sir,' she replied, 'I would rather be a poor Christian than a rich heathen. Now I can say respecting my stolen property, The Lord gave it, and the Lord hath taken it again.'"—Whitecross.

18, 19. (18) wrathful man, one easily roused to anger.[a] strife, R. V. "contention." slow to anger, ch. xiv. 29. (19) hedge of thorns,[b] "it pricks, lacerates, and entangles the miserable wretch." He is always encountering obstacles and hindrances. "Those that have no heart to their work pretend that their way is hedged up with thorns, so they cannot do it."

"Like new liquor, which works over in foam and froth when thick and troubled the joy of the sinner runs over in empty laughter and effervescent spirits when the heart is brimful of the wrath of God."—Bp. Hopkins.

"Happiness is the consciousness of having made another glad."—R. G. Sutherland.

a Ps. xxxvii. 16; 1 Ti. vi. 6.

"Riches and poverty are more in the heart than in the hand; he is wealthy that is contented, he is poor that wanteth more."—Bp. Hall.

b "Possibly refers to the confusion and disorder in human society attendant upon riches without the fear of God."
—Rucetschi.

c Heb. arucah, an appointed portion, or ration, as for a march; then any allowance or diet.

"Lord, who would live turmoil'd in the court, and may enjoy such quiet walks as these? This small inheritance my father left me contenteth me, and's worth a monarchy. I seek not to wax great by others' waning, or gather wealth, I care not with what envy; sufficeth that I have maintains my state, and sends the poor well pleased from my gate."
—Shakespeare.

a Pr. xxvi. 21, xxix. 22.

b "The Prov. condenses a parable. The slothful goes on his journey, and for him the path is thick set with thorns, briars, fences, through wh. he cannot force his way. For the upright the same path is as the broad raised causeway of the king's highway.

—Spk. Com.

"God giveth the righteous pleasure, even in the troubles of serving Him. . . . In their conversation, by the light someness and leap, as it were, of eternal hope and internal contemplation, they do pass over the impediments of temporal adversity."

—Jermin.

"I remember a great man coming into my house at Waltham; and seeing all my children standing in the order of their age and stature, he said, 'These are they that make rich men poor.' But he straight received this answer, 'Nay, my lord, these are they that make a poor man rich; for there is not one of these whom we would part with for all your wealth."

—Bp. Hall.

c Pr. x. 23; Eph. v. 15.

"The intoxication of anger, like that of the grape, shows us to others, but hides us from ourselves."

—Southgate.

"St. Ambrose saith, all vile dispositions are delighted with the follies of others: but how vile, then, is his disposition who is delighted with his own folly."

—Jermin.

a "The Heb. word used is almost an official title, and brings before us the picture of the divan or council made plain, Heb. "raised up as a causeway." "The upright man, who treads the path appointed for him resolutely and trustfully, finds all difficulties vanish; before him the thorns yield a passage."

A Plain Way.—The continued repetition of acts makes habit, and he who pushes boldly and fearlessly forward in the way of righteous exertion finds the hard become easier and the stony places smoother by the very constitution of his nature. He makes his way plain by his resolution to walk in it, he leaps the hedge while his slothful neighbor is counting the number of feet it is from the ground. It is well to look before we leap, but some look so long that they never take the leap, and the slothful man looks so long at the difficulties in his way that he never finds courage enough to grapple with them. But the very resolve to try brings strength for action, and the power grows by use until what is a hedge of thorns to an indolent man is a level road to his righteous neighbor. The word righteous being here placed in antithesis to slothful shows how great a sin it is to neglect to use the opportunities which God has given to men to ensure their real and highest interests.—Pul. Com.——Oriental Gardens (vs. 19).—The Oriental gardens were either open plantations or enclosures defended by walls or hedges. Rauwolf found about Tripoli many gardens and vineyards enclosed for the most part with hedges, and separated by shady walks. Some fences in the Holy Land, in later times, are not less beautiful than our living fences of white thorn, and perfectly answer the description of ancient Jewish prophets, who inform us that the hedges of their time consisted of thorns, and that the spikes of these thorny plants were exceedingly sharp. A hedge composed of rose bushes and wild pomegranate shrubs, then in full flower, mingled with other thorny plants, adorned in the varied livery of spring, must have made at once a strong and beautiful fence. The wild pomegranate tree, the species probably used in fencing, is much more prickly than the other variety; and when mingled with other thorny bushes, of which they have several kinds in Palestine, some whose prickles are very long and sharp, must form a hedge very difficult to penetrate. These facts illustrate the beauty and force of several passages in the sacred volume: thus, in the Proverbs of Solomon, "The way of the slothful man is as a hedge of thorns;" it is obstructed with difficulties, which the sloth and indolence of his temper represent as galling or insuperable, but which a moderate share of resolution and perseverance would easily remove or surmount.—Paxton.

20, 21. (20) wise son, ch. x. 1. despiseth, putteth to shame. The mother especially is reproached as the most intimately associated with his training. Such reproach would be a mother's deepest grief. (21) Folly, or unreasonable conduct, senseless action. joy, it gives a sort of pleasure.[c] destitute, etc., better, "void of heart." walketh uprightly, R. V. "maketh straight his going." "Lives a sober, orderly, regular life."

Understanding.—A vessel is held on her course by reason at the wheel, and wind in the sails. The wind impels her to go forward, but if the understanding at the compass did not hold the wind in subjection, there would be no safety for the vessel; nobody could say where she might be carried. Yet without the wind she could not be carried forward at all—the compass and the helm would be useless. So, although the "man of understanding" is a man of emotion—a man whose life is under the influence of that which gives him joy, he brings his emotions into subjection to the dictates of moral wisdom, and before he follows their leadings he makes sure that they are in harmony with that which is pure and holy. Then he may safely yield himself to their guidance, and be sure that they will impel him straightforward. Such a man is constrained by the delights which godliness yields to him to press on to higher attainments (2 Cor. v. 14; Phil. iii. 12, 13), while the man to whom "folly is joy" allows the pleasures of the world and the flesh to hold him from the right path, even against his conscience and his better judgment. Such a man can give no more convincing proof that he is destitute of wisdom. Pul. Com.

22, 23. (22) purposes, designs, or plans. disappointed, fr. lack of concerted, purposeful action. counsellors,[a] provided they be honest and wise. (23) answer . . mouth, the idea of the preceding verse concerning counsel is maintained. A counsellor gives wise and skilful advice, or makes a timely speech; and, knowing how much harm is done by rash or evil words, he naturally rejoices that he has been able to be useful, and has avoided the errors which the tongue is liable to incur.—Pul. Com. word . . in season, advice or sympathy given at the right moment, when the occasion demands it.

A Word in Season (vs. 23).—I. There are certain seasons in the lives of most men when a word aptly spoken may be of incalculable advantage. 1. The time of dawning manhood; 2. Of impending danger; 3. Of thoughtless sin. II. But in such seasons there will be no word spoken unless there is the speaking gift.

Wisdom in Reproof.—Reproof ought to be in season. Nature unloosed in a flying speed cannot come off with a sudden stop. To admonish a man in the height of his passion is to call a soldier to counsel in the midst—in the heat of a battle. Let the combat slack and then thou mayest expect a hearing. A word seasonably given, like a rudder, sometimes steers a man quite into another course. A blow bestowed in the striking time is better than ten delivered unseasonably.—Feltham.——A Word in Season.—Mr. Howe being at dinner with some persons of fashion, a gentleman expatiated largely in praise of King Charles I., introducing some harsh reflections upon others. Mr. Howe observing that the gentleman mixed many oaths with his discourse, told him that, in his humble opinion, he had omitted a singular excellence in the character of that prince. The gentleman eagerly desired him to mention it, and seemed all impatience to know what it was. "It was this, sir," said Mr. Howe; "he was never heard to swear an oath in common conversation." The hint was as politely received as given; and the gentleman promised to break off the practice.—R. T. S.——While Hopu, a young Sandwich Islander, was in America, he spent an evening in a company where an infidel lawyer tried to puzzle him with difficult questions. At length the native said, "I am a poor heathen boy. It is not strange that my blunders in English should amuse you. But soon there will be a larger meeting than this. We shall all be there. They will ask us all one question, namely, 'Do you love the Lord Jesus Christ?' Now, sir, I think I can say 'Yes.' What will you say, sir?" When he had stopped, all present were silent. At length the lawyer said that, as the evening was far gone, they had better conclude it with prayer; and proposed that the native youth should pray. He did so; and as he poured out his heart to God the lawyer could not conceal his feelings. Tears started from his eyes, and he sobbed aloud. All present wept too; and when they separated, the words, "What will you say, sir?" followed the lawyer home, and did not leave him till he was brought to the Saviour.

24, 25. (24) way of life, the whole course and tenor of life. above, contrasted with "beneath." It is high-toned, and tends heavenwards, R. V. "goeth upward;" to higher degrees of moral purity, elevation, and power. hell beneath,[a] the path of the wicked leading ever lower, down to the gloom of Sheol. . . (25) house, contrasted in its grandeur with the "border,"[b] or little estate, wh. is all the lot of the widow.[c] In Scrip. the widow is often made the type of desolateness. Yet such are safer in God's protection than the self-confident rich and proud. border, i. e. landmark, De. xix. 14.

True Piety (vs. 24).—I. It is elevated in principle. 1. The religion of the wise is elevated in principle above the received maxims of worldly prudence; 2. And above the accredited standard of worldly morality; 3. And above the authority of prevailing opinions. II. The wise who are in the way of life are elevated in taste. 1. Above the mere decorations of their persons and dwellings; 2. Above the desire of human applause; 3. They are superior to the admiration of merely talented men; 4. Above the feeling of enthusiastic delight in the works of mere art, of taste, or of fancy. III. They are elevated in pursuit. 1. Above what might be deemed their worldly interest; 2. Above the present benefits of religion.—C. Jenkins.

Two Paths.—On the summit of one of those distant mountains—upon whose snowy tops, as they throw back the sunlight, we can look from our Eastern coast—there trickles forth a silvery spring. Near the source there is a slight obstruction in the way of the flow of the streamlet, and the waters are divided right and left. Part trickles down the mountain chamber of Eastern countries, arranged for a solemn conference of the wise."

—Spk. Com.

"Many eyes see more than one. and many souls think more than one: therefore never esteem thyself so wise that thou shouldest not seek others' counsel."
—Hasius.

"Never commence with an attack; which, as an enemy's position, naturally provokes resistance. Study a pointed application. A word spoken for every one, like a coat made for everyone, has no individual fitness."—Bridges.

"The Spaniards in Chili believed that no water was so wholesome or of so delicate a flavor as that which flowed through veins of gold; certainly no conversation is so edifying to the hearers as that which pours forth from a heart stored with sacred knowledge, sanctified experience, and devout contemplations."
—Spurgeon.

[a] "Suggests a hopeless abode in the dark kingdom of the dead, as the final destination of the sinner's course of life."
—O. Zockler.

[b] Sometimes used for a space within borders.

[c] "Here the innocent widow who is in danger of being wronged by the proud through encroachment upon her borders."
—Lange.

"Oh, that they that have their hands elbow-deep in the earth, that are rooting and digging in it, as if they would that way dig themselves a new and nearer way to hell!—oh, that these greedy moles would be warned to flee from, the wrath to come, to take heed of hell beneath, and not sell their souls to the devil for a little pelf."—Trapp.

[a] Je. xvii. 11; Ha. ii. 9.

[b] Ex. xxiii. 81.

"Like a bee that gets into a barrel of honey, and there drowns himself, so a covetous man takes in more gold to the increasing of his estate that he damns himself in perdition." — Watson.

"The progress of a private conversation betwixt two persons of different sexes is often decisive of their fate, and gives it a turn very distinct perhaps from what they themselves anticipated. Gallantry becomes mingled with conversation, and affection and passion come gradually to mix with gallantry. Nobles, as well as shepherd swains, will, in such a trying moment, say more than they intended; and queens, like village maidens, will listen longer than they should." — Sir Walter Scott.

[c] 1 Pe. iii. 12.

God never leaves any till they leave Him first.

[d] "He that is much in prayer shall grow rich in grace, and have most of heaven upon earth." — Archbp. Leighton.

"I think we feel that those who give to us out of the exuberside towards a river, and thence is borne on to the limitless sea. Part goes the other side, and is lost, ere long, midst the thirsty sands, that are never satiated. Thus divergent are man's two paths—the shining and the dark one; thus dissimilar their course in life—their close at death. And these two paths are the only ones leading out into eternity. And when we seek in spiritual union and communion with our Maker the noblest exercise of the soul's faculties and powers, and there comes to the heart peace, sure and certain, because depending upon the inviolable Word of God, and love springing from the outwellings of the Divine love, and hope reaching into the eternal world, and grasping there at blissful immortality and joy ineffable, and prepared of God—oh! then even the foregleamings of these things, reserved for us, or else already the heritage of the soul—light up a path so shining that earth's glare and glitter fade, in comparison, wholly out of sight. For into eternity itself do these divergent paths lead. The soul, in choosing the one or the other here, is choosing for the life to come, as well as for the life that now is.—B. Perry.

26, 27. (26) thoughts, R. V., "Evil devices are," etc., as ch. vi. 18. pleasant words, or words of pleasantness: pleasing to God. Better read the second clause, "Words of pleasantness are pure," as an offering acceptable to God. (27) greedy of gain,[a] as a corrupt judge, who thinks more of bribes than of just judgments. It may be taken generally for "avarice." gifts, used as bribes.[b] live, shall prolong his days.

Thoughts.—Set thy thoughts, examine thy thoughts: thy conscience must not only extend to deeds and words but even to secret thoughts. They that are accustomed to evil thoughts can seldom bring forth good words, never good deeds. As the corn is so will the flour be; if the meal be bad, the fault is not in the millstones that ground it, but in the miller that put in such base corn. All thy senses and members are but the millstones; the heart is the miller; if thy words and works be ill meal, thank the miller, thy heart, for such corrupt thoughts. As the wood is, so will the fire be: if it be wet and stinking wood, look for an unsavory and unwholesome fire; if the wood be sweet and dry, it will perfume the room with a sweet and pleasant air. Such fuel as you lay on your thoughts, such fire shall you have in your actions.—Adams.——The Penalty of Avarice (vs. 27).—A peasant once entered the hall of justice at Florence, at the time that Alexander, Duke of Tuscany, was presiding. He stated that he had the good fortune to find a purse of sixty ducats, and learning that it belonged to Friuli, the merchant, who offered a reward of ten ducats to the finder, he restored it to him, but that he had refused the promised reward. The duke instantly ordered Friuli to be summoned into his presence, and questioned why he refused the reward? The merchant replied that he conceived the peasant had paid himself; for although when he gave notice of his loss, he said this purse contained sixty ducats, it in fact had seventy in it. The duke inquired if this mistake was discovered before the purse was found. Friuli answered in the negative. "Then," said the duke, "as I have a very high opinion of the honesty of this peasant, I am induced to believe that there is indeed a mistake in this transaction; for as the purse you lost had in it seventy ducats, and this which he found contains sixty only, it is impossible that it can be the same." He then gave the purse to the peasant, and promised to protect him against all future claimants.—Percy Anec.

28, 29. (28) studieth, i. e. "meditation," thinks before speaking. poureth out, speaking before thinking. "Caution is the fruit of wisdom, rashness of folly."—Fausset. Comp. our Lord's teaching, Mat. x. 19. The harmony of those two forms of counsel may easily be recognized. evil things, injurious things. (29) far from,[c] see John ix. 31. prayer, etc.,[d] Ps. xxxiv. 18.

Men of Thought.—The great men of earth are the shadowy men, who, having lived and died, now live again and for ever through their undying thoughts. Thus living, though their footfalls are heard no more, their voices are louder than the thunder, and unceasing as the flow of tides or air. Moses was not half living when he was alive. His real life has been since he died. The Prophets seemed almost useless in their time. They did little for themselves or for the Church of their day; but when you look at the life they have lived since you will find they have been God's pilots guiding the Church through all perils. From their black bosoms they sent forth the blast of His lightning and the roar of His thunder; and to-day, if the Church needs rebuke and denunciation, it is they who must hurl it. I could have killed old Jeremiah, if I could have got at his ribs; but I should like to see the archer that could hit him now. Martin Luther was mighty when he lived; but the shadowy Luther is mightier than a regiment of fleshly Luthers. When he was on earth, he in some sense asked the pope leave to be, and the emperor and the elector leave to be; he asked the stream and the wheat to give him sustenance for a day; but now that his body is dead, now that that rubbish is out of the way, he asks no leave of pope, or elector, or emperor, but is the monarch of thought, and the noblest defender of the faith to the end of time.—H. W. Beecher.——Value of Prayer.—There is a legend to this effect: A certain preacher, whose sermons converted men by scores, received a revelation from heaven that not one of the conversions was owing to his talents or eloquence, but all to the prayers of an illiterate lay brother, who sat on the pulpit steps, pleading all the time for the success of the sermon. It may, in the all-revealing day, be so with us. We may discover, after having labored long and wearily in preaching, that all the honor belongs to another builder, whose prayers were gold, silver and precious stones, while our sermonisings being apart from prayer, were but hay and stubble.—Anec. Illus. of O. T.

30, 31. (30) light of the eyes, "the beaming glance that shows a pure, happy mind and a friendly disposition, rejoices the heart of him on whom it is turned. There is something infectious in the guileless, joyful look of a happy man or child, which has a cheering effect upon those who observe it." good report, the good news a friend may bring to us. fat, flourish. (31) heareth, R. V. "hearkeneth to." reproof, instruction respecting the way of life. abideth among, dwells with, in the midst of, the wise.

Self-Conquest.—Peter the Great made a law in 1722 that if any nobleman beat or ill-treated his slaves he should be looked upon as insane, and a guardian should be appointed to take care of his person and of his estate. This great monarch once struck his gardener, who, being a man of great sensibility, took to his bed, and died in a few days. Peter, hearing of this, exclaimed, with tears in his eyes, "Alas! I have civilized my own subjects; I have conquered other nations; yet I have not been able to civilize or to conquer myself."—Cheever.

32, 33. (32) instruction, or correction.[a] despiseth, etc., acts as if he had no regard for his own best interests. heareth, so as to obey. understanding, moral and intellectual wisdom. (33) fear, etc.[b] Job xxviii. 28; Ps. cxi. 10. instruction, i.e. leads to wisdom. before . . humility, in the face of; in front of.[c] is, R. V. "goeth."

Despising the Soul (vs. 32).—I. Who are they that despise their own souls? 1. Those who deny the spirituality and immortality of the soul; 2. Those who in their practice disregard the law of righteousness. II. Show the folly of such a course. Consider—1. The nature of the soul; 2. Its nearness; 3. Its purchase; 4. The projects laid for souls; 5. The perpetual duration of souls. III. Application. Let us—1. See and bewail the folly of having such low thoughts of the soul; 2. Make it appear that we do value our souls; 3. Value other things as they have relation to our souls; 4. If we must not despise our own souls, neither should we the souls of others.—M. Henry.

Wellington and the Officer.—In the early part of the Duke of Wellington's career, when as Sir Arthur Wellesley, in India, an officer dining at the mess where he presided was sporting his infidel sentiments. Sir Arthur, wishing to put down such conversation, said, "S——, did you ever read Paley's Evidences?" The reply was in the negative. "Well, then," said Sir Arthur, "you had better read that book before you talk in the way you are doing." The occurrence passed away, and the conversation was soon forgotten; but the reference to Paley's work led Colonel S—— to inquire after it, and, having obtained a copy, he read it with the most serious attention. He rose from the perusal of it with the fullest conviction of the falsehood of the system he had formerly adopted, and of the Divine origin of Christianity. But he did not stop here; he was de-ance of a rich character, who do not need to seek us out and of set purpose to exert themselves to help us, but who do help us by letting us live near them and touch them with our trusting fingers, are our greatest benefactors." — Alex. McKenzie.

"Some men appear to have what is called a gift of prayer, but in reality they are only cursed with a fatal fluency in phrases." — Adeney.

"Men with grey eyes are generally keen, energetic, and at first cold; but you may depend upon their sympathy with real sorrow. Search the ranks of our benevolent men, and you will agree with me." —Leask.

[a] "Nothing but grace can teach us to make a right use of others' judgments." — Bp. Hall.

[b] "The fear of God and humility go togeth er; where the one is the other is, and as the one is the way to wisdom the other is the way to glory."—Gill.

[c] "The more humble the fitter to come to God, and He the more willing to come into the soul and dwell in it. The highest heavens are the habitation of God's glory, and the humble heart hath the next honor to be the habitation of His grace." — Archbp. Leighton.

"Humility preserves the true and noble freedom of the mind of man, secures his dear liberty and peaceful dominion of himself. This is the effect of excellent wisdom." — W. Bates.

"Descend, that ye may rise up to God; for you have fallen by rising up against God." — Augustine.

termined to examine the Book itself, which he was thus satisfied was a revelation from God. The result was that he cordially received this revelation of mercy, saw and felt his need of a Saviour, and, believing in Jesus, became a Christian not in name only, but in deed and truth. Colonel S——, feeling his obligation to Sir Arthur, afterwards wrote to him, thanking him for his kindness in recommending to him Dr. Paley's valuable work, and earnestly advised him not to be satisfied with merely knowing the external evidence of Christianity, but to inquire what this Divine communication really contains.

CHAPTER THE SIXTEENTH.

1—3. (1) preparations, R. V. marg., "plans."[a] answer .. tongue, i. e. answer to its requests. God only can do what is desired; "man proposes, God disposes." (2) clean .. eyes, the last thing a man is willing to see is his own failings and faults.[b] weigheth, tests, tries, judges the value of. God is a "discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart." (3) Commit, etc., lit. roll.[c] thoughts, plans which thou wouldest work out.

Spirit-weighing (vs. 2).—I. Man deceived. Why? 1. Because they adopt the moral standard of the circle in which they move; 2. Because they judge themselves by those who are worse than they are; 3. Because they take false views of moral evil; 4. Because there is an absence of careful examination about them. II. Deity investigating. Here is suggested to us—1. The wonderfulness of God's power; 2. Of God's pitifulness.—H. J. Martyn.

Weighing Our Plans.—Before proceeding to any work we should weigh it. Letters are charged in the Post Office according to weight. I have written and sealed a letter containing several sheets: I desire that it should pass, I think that it will, but I know well that it will not be allowed to pass because I desire that it should or think that it will. I know well that it will be tested by imperial weights and measures. Before I plunge it beyond my reach, I place it on a balance before me, not constructed to please my desire, but honestly adjusted to the legal standard. I weigh it there, and check it myself by the very rules which Government will apply. So should we weigh our purposes in the balance, before we launch them forth in action.—W. Arnot.

4—6. (4) for himself, R. V., "for its own end;" fitting it to the precise object for which He designed it. wicked .. evil, any day of calamity is meant, either in this life or in another.[a] "It is an ordinance of God that the wicked shall receive that retribution wh. corresponds to their conduct."—Stuart. (5) proud, etc., ch. vi. 17. hand, etc., even if he exercises all his powers in resistance to God yet must he suffer the penalty, ch. xi. 21. (6) mercy and truth,[b] love to God and man, and fidelity to social obligations are set in contrast with ritual sacrifices and ceremonies. purged, cleared out of our heart, R. V. marg., "atoned for."

The Secret of Deliverance from Evil (vs. 6).—There is evil in the world: the evil of sin. How am I to get quit of this evil? This is the great question. 1. Not by time—time cures many things, but not this; 2. Not by effort; 3. Not by human wisdom; 4. Not by law; 5. Not by terror; but by the fear of the Lord, which unfolds itself in—(1) Obedience; (2) Fellowship; (3) Love; (4) Zeal. If we fear God we must—1. Try to please Him; 2. Give up sin; 3. Do His will; 4. Seek to be like Him.—Bonar.

God's Ways.—The Just and Merciful One, as He disposes the deeds of mortals, vouchsafes some things in mercy, and permits other things in anger; and the things which He permits He so bears with that He turns them to the account of His purpose. And hence it is brought to pass in a marvelous way that even that which is done without the will of God is not contrary to the will of God. For while evil deeds are converted to a good use, the very things that oppose His design render service to His design.—St. Gregory.——Human Reverses.—Bajazet having observed, after his enemy made him prisoner, that the latter laughed at him, said, "Do not laugh, Tamerlane, at my misfortune, for God, not you, has subdued me; and He is able to-morrow to undo what He has a "Thoughts come and go, as it were, spontaneously, but true, well-ordered speech is the gift of God.." — Spk. Com.

b "Conscience then, simply as conscience, is no safe guide; it requires to be informed and regulated by God's will and Word. A right intention is not enough to make a good action." — Wordsworth.

c Ps. xxii. 8, xxxvii. 5, iv. 22.

The statesman looks with partial eyes upon the law that he has introduced. Most men are disposed to judge partially of their own deeds; ungodly men always regard their "own ways" as "clean." —Hom. Com.

a Job xxi. 30; Is. xliii. 21.

"It is one of the greatest praises of God's wisdom that He can turn the evil of men to His own glory." — Bp. Hall.

b Ps. l. 13, 14, li. 16, 17; Mic. vi. 6—8.

"No man can subdue the pride of his own heart. Again and again we are brought to the solemn truth that that heart is an instrument which God alone can attune, and on which he alone can discourse music acceptable to his own ear." —J. Parker.

done to-day, and reverse our situations." Tamerlane immediately assumed a serious countenance, and answered, "I laughed not with a design to exult over you, but from a sudden impression that thrones and kingdoms must be held in low estimation in heaven, since one crown has been bestowed on such a blink-eyed man as you, and another on such a crippled man as myself." Thrones and rickety chairs are of equal reckoning in the arithmetic of heaven. Nothing, so far as regards man, is of value there, except "the pearl which is beyond price"—"the righteousness of the Lord Jesus Christ, imputed to us by God, and received by faith alone."—Whitecross.

7, 8. (7) at peace with him, that goodness wh. is acceptable to God tends also to pacify and to win men.[a] (8) Better, etc., Ps. xxxvii. 16; Pr. xv. 16.[b] without right, ref. either to wickedness in general, or to fraud and oppression, in obtaining the "revenues."

Pleasing God (vs. 7).—Consider this subject—I. As a glorious possibility of being. The ways are not merely external service, but a loving obedience to His will. If we please Him we shall—1. Please ourselves: 2. The spiritual universe. II. As winning the good will of enemies. 1. A good man may have enemies; 2. The overcoming of their enmity is a desirable thing; 3. Pleasing the Lord is the surest way to overcome it. —Thomas.

A Little With Righteousness.—Abraham would not take to himself of the spoils of Sodom so much as the value of a shoe-latchet, that it might never be said in after times that the king of Sodom had made Abraham rich; so neither will any godly man that hath learned the art of contentation, suffer a penny of the gain of ungodliness to mingle with the rest of his estate, that the devil may not be able to upbraid him with it afterwards to his shame, as if he had contributed something towards the increasing thereof.—Bishop Sanderson.

9, 10. (9) deviseth, arranges it with anxious thought. Comp. vs. 1. The form of the verb suggests the idea of laborious consideration. directeth, determines precisely how they shall go. (10) divine sentence, as representative of God, the king's decisions had a special validity and dignity. transgresseth not, doth not speak wickedly;[c] or with Stuart, "should not:" the sentence of a king ought to be just.

Providence.—The great drama of a nation's politics, and the most mighty changes in the history and character of mankind, may hinge on circumstances of the most trivial nature. One of the most remarkable instances of this sort is found in the history of Mohammed. When his pursuers followed hard upon him to take his life, they were turned away from the mouth of the cave in which he had the moment before taken shelter by the flight of a bird from one of the shrubs that grew at its entry. For they inferred that if he had recently passed that way, the bird must previously have been frightened away, and would not now have made its appearance. It is a striking remark of the historian, that this bird, by its flight on this occasion, changed the destiny of the world —instrumental as it was in perpetuating the life of the false Prophet, and with him the reign of that superstition which to this day hath a wider ascendency over our species than Christianity itself. Such are the links and concatenations of all history. It is well that God has the management, and that what to man is chaos, in the hands of God is a sure and unerring mechanism.—Cheever.

11—13. (11) just weight, R. V., "just balance and scales," see ch. xi. 1. are the Lord's, "they come under His law, are subject to the Divine ordinances which regulate all man's dealings. The great principles of truth and justice govern all the transactions of buying and selling; religion enters into the business of trading, and weights and measures are sacred things."—Pul. Com. weights .. bag,[a] lit. stones. "The trader's weights take their authority from certain eternal principles which God has established. What man's chicanery and fraud make of them does not come into view." (12) abomination, in God's sight and men's. The high position and influence of kings makes their character of supreme importance. righteousness, etc., not by deceit, not by pomp, not by armies, but by the exalted char. of a ruler is the throne rendered "Virtue begins in the forsaking of vice; and the first part of wisdom is not to be a fool."

"Out of evil God brings good; and men keep Him busy." — R. G. Sutherland.

[a] Pr. xxv. 21, 22.

[b] The fewer desires the more peace. The only sure way to peace is to give the heart entirely to God." — Bp. Wilson.

"It is our peace with God that maketh Him to make our enemies to be at peace with us, and it is our enmity against God's enemies that maketh God to be at peace with us." — Jermin.

[c] "The passage lays down the principle that the King can do no wrong, in a narrower assertion of it, and with this difference, that it is here no political fiction, but a believing conviction." — Hilzig. 1 Ki. iii. 9, Ps. lxxii. 1.

"Ah that Deceit should steal such gentle shapes, and with a virtuous visor hide deep vice!" — Shakespeare.

" Who dares think one thing, and another tell, my heart detests him as the gates of hell." —Pope.

[a] "The principle that social justice is an essential part of religion is exemplified in our own country, where the standard weights are enshrined in a sacred building attached to the Church where the sovereigns of England are crowned."—Wordsworth.

secure. (13) Righteous lips, speaking truth and goodness. right, i. e. upright things.[b]

Just Weights.—The point of this proverb is different from that of our low-toned though oft useful saying, "Honesty is the best policy." Every day we are discovering more and more how profoundly true that saying is, if not in the narrow view some take of it, yet in its broad issues and in the long run. But nó man will be truly honest who puts policy before honesty, and bases his morality on selfish expediency. Therefore, if we are ever to reap the personal profit promised in the English proverb, we must mold our conduct on higher principles, such as that of the Hebrew proverb, which teaches us that dishonesty in trade is hateful to God, and that justice is His delight.—Pul. Com.——Our Duty to Our Neighbors.—In a Christian country surely we should have some regard for the great maxim of Christ, that we should do to others as we would that they should do unto us. The tradesman should put himself in the customer's case, the buyer in that of the seller. Brotherly kindness is the best human safeguard for integrity; but above this should be our regard for the approval of God. We please God not so much by singing hymns and offering sacrifices as by honest business. "A just weight is His delight."—Pul. Com.

14, 15. (14) wrath . . death, the means for executing his wrath are close to his hand. Specially true of irresponsible and capricious Eastern sovereigns.[c] Est. vii. 5—10. pacify it, take care not to arouse the anger. (15) light, or smile, sign of favor and acceptance. is life, not only assuring the preservation of life, but also the joy and pleasure of life. The king's smile makes glad those it shines upon. cloud, etc., wh. is most welcome to the parched and thirsty earth. latter rain, wh. fell just before harvest, to mature the crop:[d] its month was March or April.

A King's Wrath (vs. 14).—Executions in the East are often very prompt and arbitrary. In many cases the suspicion is no sooner entertained, or the cause of offense given, than the fatal order is issued; the messenger of death hurries to the unsuspecting victim, shows his warrant, and executes his orders that instant in silence and solitude. Instances of this kind are constantly occurring in the Turkish and Persian histories. "When the enemies of a great man among the Turks have gained influence enough over the prince to procure a warrant for his death, a capidgi (the name of the officer who executes these orders) is sent to him, who shows him the order he has received to carry back his head; the other takes the warrant of the grand seignior, kisses it, puts it on his head in token of respect, and then having performed his ablutions, and said his prayers, freely resigns his life. The capidgi having strangled him, cuts off his head, and brings it to Constantinople. The grand seignior's order is implicitly obeyed; the servants of the victim never attempt to hinder the executioner, although these capidgis come very often with few or no attendants." To such silent and hasty executioners the royal preacher seems to refer in that proverb, "The wrath of a king is as messengers of death; but a wise man will pacify it;" his displeasure exposes the unhappy offender to immediate death, and may fill the unsuspecting bosom with terror and dismay, like the appearance of a capidgi; but by wise and prudent conduct, a man may sometimes escape the danger.—Paxton.

16, 17. (16) better, etc., see ch. vii. 11.[a] Wordsworth notices the distinction in the values attached to wisdom (Heb. chocmah), the guide of life, and to intelligence (Heb. binah), lit. discernment, the faculty of distinguishing between one thing and another. (17) highway, raised, well-graded road: representing the habitual course of the righteous.[b] keepeth, by godly watching and care.

Keeping in the Way.—Every traveler has something very precious in his custody—his own soul. You will lose it, pilgrim, if you go off the way. The miners in the gold-fields of Australia, when they have gathered a large quantity of the dust, make for the city with the treasure. The mine is far in the interior, the country is wild, the bush is infested by robbers; the miners keep the road and the daylight. They march in company, and close by the guard sent to protect them. They do not [b] Is. xi. 2—4. "An honest death is better than a dishonest life. " — Socrates.

"There never was a kingdom so corrupt that its courts of justice were not used, in the main, against wickedness. There never was a Nero, or a Borgia, who, on the very account of his own crimes, did not find crime sore, and a trouble to him, in those about him."—Miller.

[c] " An angry word from an incensed prince has been to many a messenger of death, and has struck so great a terror upon some as if a sentence of death had been pronounced upon them." — Mat. Henry.

Pr. xix. 12, xx. 2.

[d] De. xi. 14; Je. iii. 3, v. 24.

" What sudden anger's this ? how have I reaped it? He parted frowning from me, as if ruin leap'd from his eyes; so looks the chafed lion upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd him; then makes him nothing." — Shakespeare.

"In a penitent disposition, nothing is so sweet as to fall into the loving and most gracious hands of the living God." — Du Bosc.

[a] Pr. iii. 13 — 16, iv. 5.

[b] "A noble paradox; the highway of the upright is a byway from evil; the byway of the wicked is a highway to evil. Mat. vii. 13. " — Wordsworth.

"Gold changes in value; gold sometimes flies away like a stray from the path among the woods, for they carry with them a treasure which they value, and they are determined to run no risks.—W. Arnot.

18, 19. (18) Pride, etc., see ch. xi. 2, xviii. 12. destruction, as seen in Pharaoh, Sennacherib, Nebuchadnezzar, etc. haughty spirit, the lifting up of the spirit. fall, a tottering, a downfall.[c] (19) lowly, R. V., "poor.' divide the spoil, as they do who conquer in battle.

Pride and Humility.—I. The evil of pride. 1. It is based on falsity; 2. It is irreverent and ungrateful; 3. It is ugly and offensive in the sight of man; 4. It is repeatedly and severely condemned by God as a serious sin. III. The excellence of humility. 1. It is founded on a true view of our own hearts; 2. It is admirable in itself; 3. It is the very gateway into the kingdom of God; 4. It is an attribute of Christian character which commends us to the love and to the favor of our Lord; 5. It is the only ground on which we are safe.—Clarkson.

Pride.—It is a strange truth that God should dwell in a human heart at all, but it is almost self-evident that if He is to dwell in any human heart it must be in one which has been emptied of all pride, one which has, as it were, thrown down all the barriers of self-importance, and laid itself open to the incoming Spirit. If we cling to ever so little of our natural egotism; if we dwell on any imagined excellence, purity, or power of our own; if we are conscious of any elation, any springing sense of merit, which would set us, in our own judgment, on some equality with God,—how could the High and Lofty One that inhabiteth Eternity enter in? That thought of vanity would seek to divide our nature with Him, would enter into negotiations for a joint occupation, and the insulted Spirit of God would depart.——A Wise Answer.—The answer of St. Francis was very characteristic. Could he really believe that he was so vile as he said, when he compared himself with others who were obviously worse? "Ah," he said, "it is when I recount all God's exceptional mercies to me that I seem to myself the worst of men, for others have not had such favors at His hands."——Modesty.—A French writer remarks, that "the modest deportment of those who are truly wise, when contrasted with the assuming air of the young and ignorant, may be compared to the different appearance of wheat, which, while its ear is empty, holds up its head proudly, but as soon as it is filled with grain, bends modestly down, and withdraws from observation."—Whitecross.

20, 21. (20) handleth,[a] etc. Vulg, etc., rend. "He that attendeth to the Word of God," ch. xiii. 13. find good, ch. xvii. 20, xix. 8. trusteth, etc., led by the Word to a real and practical reliance on God.[b] (21) wise in heart, who have moral wisdom. prudent, bec. they will be sure to consider carefully their conduct. sweetness .. learning, lit. "grace of lips." "He who has the gift of uttering moral wisdom in winning speech increases it in himself and in others."—Spk. Com.

How to Take Hold of Life (vs. 20).—I. Wisdom is man's true strength; and, under its guidance, he best accomplishes the ends of his being. II. Wisely handling the matter of life gives to man the richest enjoyment, and presents the noblest occupation for his powers; hence by it he finds good in the fullest sense. III. The true way to handle a matter wisely is to trust in the Lord. IV. He who trusts in the Lord has a diploma for wisdom granted by inspiration: happy is he now, and happier shall he be above.—C. H. Spurgeon.

Rev. S. Lowell.—The late Rev. Samuel Lowell, of Bristol, being once at Brighton, expressed a wish to walk on the Steyne, and to have the public characters pointed out to him. Amongst the rest, a celebrated comedian was noticed. "Ah," said Mr. Lowell, "is that ——, my old schoolfellow? I'll speak to him." He accosted him, and the following conversation took place:—Lowell: "Sir, I believe I have the pleasure of addressing Mr. ——." Player: "Yes, sir, my name is ——; but I have not the pleasure of being acquainted with you." L.: "What! not know your old schoolfellow, Samuel Lowell?" P.: "What! are you Samuel Lowell?" L.: "Yes, I am." P.: "Well, I am very glad to see you; now tell me your history in five minutes." L.: "First, my name is Samuel Lowell; I am a Dissenting minister at Bristol, where I have lived up-frightened bird from the nest which it has warmed; but wisdom abides in winter and in summer." — Parker.

c Comp. Bunyan's Pilgrim Song — "He that is down need fear no fall, he that is low no pride."

d "Humility is much better than that high-spiritedness which, though it carry away the honor and wealth of the world, makes God a man's enemy and the devil his master." — Mat. Henry.

"Pride is a slippery place, where we are sure to slip and fall; humility is the ground where devotion finds its home, where God is ready with the shield of his guardian ship, where human souls attain to their maturity in Jesus Christ their Lord." — Clarkson.

a "Discretion in speech is more than eloquence." —Lord Bacon.

b "This is the way to walk contentedly and cheerfully homewards, leaning and resting all the way on Him who is our guide and our strength." — Archbp. Leighton.

"A half-religion does not give even half-happiness. Serve God with a whole heart, if you want whole-hearted enjoyment."

"It is not uncommon with bad men to set off their corrupt sentiments by dressing them in all the beauties of language, and by this means multitudes are seduced into error and folly."— Lawson.

wards of twenty years; I have a large family." P.: "So you are a Dissenting minister; well, you are a happy man, for you go to your work with pleasure, and perform it with pleasure: you are a happy man. I go to my work like a fool, to please fools: I am not a happy man.—R. T. S. Trust in God.—If a man is following a guide in some difficult and dangerous path, it is necessary to his peace of mind that he should know enough about his guide to be assured that he will lead him aright. If he does not know enough about him to know this, he may be haunted by underlying doubts and fears which will banish all comfort from his mind. When a ship's crew have so little knowledge of their captain's character and ability as to be uncertain whether he is able or whether he intends to bring his ship safely to her destined port, they will be possessed by a spirit of uneasiness. But if they know that all his powers will be directed to that end, and that his ability is equal to the task, they will sail through the deep in comparative rest and peace. So no human soul can possess a confidence in God which will keep it calm and restful amid the waves of life's sea, unless he has made himself acquainted with the character of God—unless he knows so much about Him as to feel assured that His ways and works are perfectly wise and good.—Hom. Com.

22. Understanding, i. e. discretion. wellspring,[c] ch. xiv. 27, a fountain always flowing, and never dry. "The possessor of understanding has in himself a source of comfort and a vivifying power, which is as refreshing as a cool spring to a thirsty traveler." instruction .. folly, R. V., "correction of fools," etc.; "his own folly is the scourge which punishes him; refusing the teaching of wisdom, he makes misery for himself, deprives himself of the happiness which virtue gives, and pierces himself through with many sorrows."

Vigor of the Understanding.—Nobody knows what strength of parts he has till he has tried them. And of the understanding one may most truly say that its force is greater generally than it thinks, till it is put to it. And therefore the proper remedy here is but to set the mind to work, and apply the thoughts vigorously to the business; for it holds in the struggles of the mind as in those of war, dum putant se vincere, vicere. A persuasion that we shall overcome any difficulties that we meet with in the sciences, seldom fails to carry us through them. Nobody knows the strength of his mind, and the force of steady and regular application, till he has tried. This is certain; he that sets out upon weak legs will not only go farther, but grow stronger, too, than one who, with a vigorous constitution and firm limbs, only sits still.—Locke.

23, 24. (23) teacheth, or maketh wise; prompteth wise words. Wisdom in the heart is the main matter. learning, sound reasoning, and forcible argument, wh. may convince the judgment. (24) honeycomb, comp. Ps. xix. 10. sweet, and so giving pleasure; and healing, so as to renew health. "This implies that honey took its place not only among the luxuries, but also among the medicines of the Israelites." bones, regarded as the strength of the man: "our innermost and most essential being."—Miller.

Pleasant Words.—I. Pleasant words are good in social intercourse. They are said to cost little, while they are worth much. But often they are not to be had without trouble. 1. Sympathy; 2. Self-repression; 3. Thought. II. Pleasant words are needed in Christian teaching. 1. In teaching the young; 2. In interesting the careless; 3. In comforting the sorrowful. III. Pleasant words are found in the gospel of Christ. 1. They tell us of God's love; 2. They portray Christ; 3. They invite men to salvation; 4. They reveal the blessedness of the kingdom of heaven.—Pul. Com.

Pleasant Words.—Words of honey soon cloy if no satisfying thoughts lie behind them. Pleasant words should be more than words—they should be messengers of healing, suggestions of helpfulness. Now, as some trouble is required for the production of this kind of speech in daily intercourse, it is well to consider how valuable it is. It draws hearts together. It lightens the load of life and oils its wheels. There are enough of clouds about the souls of most men to make it desirable that we should shed all the sunshine that we possibly can. It would be like

"'Tis the property of all true knowledge, especially spiritu a l, to enlarge the soul by filling it; to enlarge it without swelling it; to make it more cap a b l e, and more earnest to know, the more it knows."—Sprat.

c "The thought is here in the first instance unquestionably of the blessing wh. comes directly to the possessor fr. his wisdom, and not of its life-dispensing, life-promoting influence on others."—O. Zockler.

"Extremes meet in a liv e l y Christian. He is at once very high and very lowly. God puts all His treasures in the power of a soul that rises to reach the upper springs, as the Andes intercept water from the sky sufficient to fertilize a continent." — Arnot.

"There is no sweetness t h a t entereth into the lips to be compared to the sweetness that cometh from the lips."

"Though wisdom in the heart is of the chiefest worth, yet eloquence of the lips is an addition to it. St. A u g u s t ine, speaking of himself, saith, that when he heard S t. Ambrose prea c h i n g, 'I stood by as one careless of the matter he spake, and a contemner of it, and I was delighted with the sweetness of his words; but together with the words which I respected, th e matter came into my heart which I neglected, and while I opened my heart to receive how eloa migration from Northern gloom to Southern sunshine for all speech to be seasoned with truly pleasant words.—Pul. Com.

25, 26. (25) There is, etc., ch. xiv. 12. (26) He that laboureth, etc., R. V., "The appetite of the laboring man laboreth for him." Hunger is a strong incentive to work. mouth, etc., R. V. marg., "urgeth him thereto." His mouth (we should say "stomach") must have food to put in it. The necessity of satisfying his appetite urges him to work.[a]

The Blessing of Hunger.—I. At bottom, hunger, the need of bread, is the great sting and goad to all exertion, to useful activity in general. II. Hence hunger is the helper of our toil. And we may thank God for every stimulus to do our best. Have not the best things been done for the world in every department by poor men? III. As applied to religion, it is the hunger of the soul which prompts us to seek for righteousness; the emptiness of other joys which sends us to the feast of the gospel. Through toil and trouble, the worst unrest and distress can alone be overcome.—Johnson.

Oubliettes (vs. 25).—On the Lake of Geneva there stands a gloomy castle, where prisoners used to be confined, and in it there was a dark dungeon, with a dreadful staircase called the "oubliettes." Sometimes the keeper went to a poor prisoner, and told him that now he was to obtain his life and liberty, and requested him to follow him. The prisoner went along thankful and glad, with visions of home and happiness. He reached the staircase, and was told to go down, step by step, in the darkness, that he might reach the castle gate, and so be free. Alas! it was a broken stair. A few steps down into the darkness, and the next step he took he found no footing, but fell down fifty or sixty feet, to be dashed to pieces amongst rocks, and then to have his mangled body buried in the lake.—Anec. Illus. of O. T.

27—30. (27) diggeth, etc., shovels out evil, R. V., "deviseth mischief." He does not work to satisfy hunger, but toils hard at mischief and wickedness. burning fire, i. e. "heated calumnious speeches." (28) soweth, R. V., "scattereth abroad." strife, one feature of the evil at wh. he works. whisperer, or backbiter: one who suggests, rather than states, evil things. A prater, talebearer. separateth, alienateth, divideth, makes misunderstandings between. chief friends, those in closest intimacy. (29) violent man, or man of mischief, ch. iii. 31, marg. (30) shutteth, etc., as ch. vi. 12—14.[a] moving, R. V., "compresseth," this denotes firm determination, hence evil is sure to follow.

A Law Against Bad Company.—An ancient historian, mentioning the laws which Charondas gave the Thurians, says: "He enacted a law with reference to an evil, on which former lawgivers had not animadverted—that of keeping bad company. As he conceived that the morals of the good were sometimes quite ruined by their dissolute acquaintance; that vice was apt, like an infectious disease, to spread itself and extend its contagion, he expressly enjoined, that none should engage in any intimacy or familiarity with immoral persons; appointed that an accusation might be exhibited for keeping bad company; and laid a heavy fine on such as were convicted of it."—Bib. Ill.

The Backbiter.—

He that shall rail against his absent friends,
Or hears them scandalized, and not defends,
Sports with their fame, and speaks whate'er he can,
And only to be thought a witty man,
Tells tales, and brings his friends in disesteem,
That man's a knave—be sure beware of him.—Horace.

31. If, this word should be omitted; read, "it shall be found." "Grace is the glory of old age." The O. Test. teaches that the wicked shall not live out half their days, hence gray hairs are the reward of righteousness.

32, 33. (32) slow to anger, not easily roused: ch. xiv. 17, 29. ruleth,[b] etc., here meaning the temper, the passionate movement and excitement of the spirit. "That is the noblest victory wh. we obtain over ourselves." Comp. the death of Alex. the Great at the age of 32 fr. debauchery. (33) lot, forecasting the future. lap, or fold of the garment: sometimes called quently he spake, it entered also into my heart how truly he spake.' " — Jermin.

[a] Ecc. vi. 7; 2 Th. iii. 10 — 12.

"The animal soul as distinguished fr. the higher intellectual, moral, and religious nature, feels the pressure of life's necessities and impels to efforts for their relief." —O. Zockler.

"Self - love is a damning sin where it reigns as the chief principle of action; but the want of self - love where it is required as no less criminal." — Lawson.

" Sluggish idleness — the nurse of sin." —Spencer.

" There is nothing so well meant, but it may be ill-interpreted." — Bp. Patrick.

[a] "The physiognomy of the slanderer, the man of Belial,—the half - closed eyes that never look you straight in the face, the restlessness or cunning of wh. biting the lips is the surest indication." —Spk. Com.

"We honor them whose heads have been encircled with crowns by the hands of men, and will we refuse honor to those whom God Himself hath crowned with silver hairs?" — Lawson.

"As the completion of a work is more glorious than the beginning, so is age more glorious than youth." — Pulsford.

[b] Mat. v 5.

the bosom.[c] disposing, etc., the final decision; the result of drawing.[a] The events that seem most fortuitous are really ordered by God.

Self-control.—A young man desired to become the disciple of a philosopher and attend his lectures. "Go first," said he, "to the marble quarries and carry stones for three years, among the malefactors condemned to the mines." He did so and reported to the philosopher at the end of the time. He was sent back to repeat his experience, and to pay money to those who should most bitterly insult and revile him, but to make no answer. He obeyed, and after another three years reported to his tutor. He was told that he might now go to Athens and be initiated into the schools of the philosophers. At the city gate an old man sat, who made it his business to abuse all who passed. The young man said nothing, but laughed to hear himself so outrageously abused. The old man asked the reason for his conduct. He said, "I have given money these three years to all who have treated me as you do; and shall I not laugh now it costs me nothing to be reviled?" The old man answered, "Welcome to the schools of philosophy! You are worthy of a seat in them." He added, "Behold the gate of heaven. All the faithful servants of the Lord have entered into this joy by suffering injuries and humiliations with meekness and patience." It is related of many that they have so disciplined themselves as to be able to endure reviling, opposition or slight without the least emotion of anger or resentment by the power of philosophy alone.—Foster's Cycl.

CHAPTER THE SEVENTEETH.

1. Better, or sweeter. dry morsel, i. e. a dry piece of bread, without any wine, or vinegar, to take with it.[b] quietness, freedom from quarrelling.[c] sacrifices, R. V. "feasting." "A house full of sacrifices is one abounding in sumptuous feasts."—Spk. Com.

Family Scenes (vss. 1, 2).—We have here three things which are often found in household life. I. A discontented temper. II. A worthless son. III. A valuable servant. 1. A well-tried servant gets moral influence in a house; 2. And sometimes shares the fortunes of the house. Learn—(1) That the temper of a man's soul is more important to him than his temporal condition; (2) That the power of character is superior to the power of station.—Thomas.

Family Worship.—Philip Henry was most exemplary in his practice of family devotion. Besides the regular plan of reading and expounding the Scriptures, morning and evening, he used strongly to recommend singing: saying that it was a way of exhibiting godliness, like Rahab's scarlet thread, to such as pass by our windows. His children and servants used to take notes of his expositions; and the foundation of Matthew Henry's Commentary was laid from these notes. Besides this, on Thursday evening, instead of reading, he used to catechise his children and servants upon the Assembly's Catechism, with the proofs, or sometimes in a smaller catechism; or else they read, and he examined them in some other useful book; and on Saturday evening they gave him an account of what they could remember of the chapters they had read through during the week, each a several part in order. Besides this, he had also days of humiliation with his family. The consequence was that, in addition to the blessings resulting to his own children, many who came to live with them dated their first impressions from these services, and gave God thanks that they ever came under his roof.—Bowes.

2. wise servant, ch. xiv. 35: such as Eliezer of Damascus, Ge. xv. 2. have rule, as Ziba, 2 Sa. xvi. 4. causeth shame,[a] lit. a degenerate, bad, unprofitable son. part .. brethren, i. e. from his place as slave he shall rise to get a place as son.

Influence of a Wise Man.—A servant who understands his duties, and conscientiously fulfils them, will win respect and confidence, and these will give him influence in his master's house, and over all with whom his business brings him into contact. There are many instances, both in the history of private families and in the history of courts, in which the judicious conduct of a subordinate person has averted evils which would other-

[c] Pr. xxi. 14.

"We are wont to call the doubled or folded front of the dress the lap."— O. Zockler.

[a] "How sweetly doth God dispose of all second causes, that while they do their own will they do His."— Bp. Hall.

"None were to triumph in Rome that had not got five victories; and he shall never triumph in heaven that subdueth not his five senses." — Isidorus.

"Such an one is more excellent than he that is strong of body; for he can bear reproaches, which are more intolerable burdens than any that are wont to be laid upon the backs of the strongest." — Muffet.

[b] Pr. xv. 17; 1 Ti. vi. 6.

[c] "There may be peace and quietness where there are not three meals a day, provided there be a joint satisfaction in God's providence, and a mutual satisfaction in each other's prudence." — Mat. Henry.

"The secret of happiness lies rather in limiting our desires than in increasing our substance."

"If love be the entertainer, it matters not much what the provision be." — Jermin.

[a] Pr. x. 5.

"The author of the Prov. felt keenly on this point, and had bitter apprehensions, wh. were too fully verified in his son's career." — Wordsworth.

wise have followed the crimes of a son of the house, and the father of such a son can but acknowledge such services, and reward them, if he is possessed of any gratitude. But whether he does so or not, it is an ordination of God's providence, which we see in constant operation around us, that a wise man is a fool's master. It is a law of nature that a stronger physical body shall govern the weaker, if no other power interferes, and it is a law in the universe of mind that the stronger mind shall rule the weak, and make it serve his purpose in some way. This is the secret of many of the social changes which are always going on, in which some who were born to affluence come down to penury, and those who were born in obscurity take their places.—Hom. Com.

3. fining pot,[b] see ch. xxvii. 21. The intimation is that man's work of testing and trying can only concern things. Man's fining pot is for metals, he has no fining pot for hearts, God only has the power to prove and try hearts; see Ps. cxxxix. 23, 24.

Trials Polish.—It is rough work that polishes. Look at the pebbles on the shore! Far inland, where some arm of the sea thrusts itself deep into the bosom of the land, and, expanding into a salt loch, lies girdled by the mountains, sheltered from the storms that agitate the deep, the pebbles on the beach are rough, not beautiful; angular, not rounded. It is where long white lines of breakers roar, and the rattling shingle is rolled about the strand, that its pebbles are rounded and polished. As in nature, as in the arts, so in grace; it is rough treatment that gives souls, as well as stones, their lustre; the more the diamond is cut, the brighter it sparkles; and in what seems hard dealing, their God has no end in view but to perfect His people's graces. Our Father, and kindest of fathers, He afflicts not willingly: He sends tribulations, but hear Paul tell their purpose: "Tribulation worketh patience, patience experience, experience hope."—Guthrie.

4. wicked doer, one inwardly corrupt. Such a one readily attends to deceit, mischief, and injury when it is spoken. a liar, one full of inward insincerity and hypocrisy. naughty, or calumnious tongue, R. V. "mischievous." These men find food and pleasure in all kinds of wicked discourse.

Liars.—In the general postoffice sorting room there is a hole in the wall, darkened by a grating through which a frequent watch is kept upon the letter-sorters. Notwithstanding this, deceit often goes undetected by man, but never undetected by God. A confirmed liar is like a crooked, knotty tree, fit only for the fire. We despise and discard a watch that never tells the true time, a ruler that will not enable you to rule a straight line, a portrait that is not faithful; so God will, at the judgment-day, dismiss from His presence "all liars."—J. H. Vincent.

5, 6. (5) mocketh, etc., ch. xiv. 31. glad at calamities, by wh. men are sometimes suddenly made poor. Rejoicing in evil that befalls others is one of the most hateful forms of sin. unpunished, Heb. "held innocent." They shall surely come into the judgments of God.[a] (6) Children's children, descendants in two or three generations to continue the family name and estate. fathers, or honored ancestors. Parents rejoice in a virtuous line of descendants; children in a long line of noble ancestors.

A Godly Ancestry.—John Paton, that noble missionary to the New Hebrides, has given us a vivid picture of his early home. It was a plain lowland cottage, with its "but and ben," and between the two a small chamber with a diminutive window shedding diminutive light on the scene. To this room the children saw the father retire oftentimes a day, and shut to the door; they would occasionally hear the pathetic pleadings of the voice that prayed, and they learnt to slip past the door on tiptoe. They got to understand whence came that happy light upon their father's face; they recognized it as a reflection from the Divine presence, in the consciousness of which he lived. Let a child draw his first breath in a house which possesses a sanctuary like that; let him come to know by his quick childish perceptions that there is in his home a ladder set up from earth to heaven, and that the angels of God go up and down on it; let him feel the Divine atmosphere in his face, the air all suffused with heavenly light, the sweetness and the calm which prevail in a place where a constant communion is maintained,—and in after years he will "Better, the poorest hold upon the Church, if there be the humbler hold upon the service of the Most High." —Miller.

b "The art of smelting ore, wh. must have been known to the Israelites fr. the time of their sojourning in Egypt, but had probably been brought into fresh prominence through intercourse with the Phoenicians and with Sheba, here becomes a parable." — Spk. Com.

"When we are burned in the heat of persecution then are we tried in the holdfast of our faith." — Tertullian.

" Falsehood is fire in stubble; it likewise turns all the light stuff around it into its own substance for a moment, one crackling, blazing moment, and then dies; and all its contents are scattered in the wind, without place or evidence of their existence, as viewless as the wind which scatters them." — S. T. Coleridge.

a Eze. xxv. 6, 7.

"That was a beautiful motto of Tyndale, the translator of the English Bible, who was an earnest preacher and teacher—'Banish me to the poorest corner of the world if you please, but let me teach little children and preach the Gospel.' "

"To pour contempt upon the current coin with the king's image on it, is treason against the sovereign. No less contempt is it of the Sacred Majesty, to despise the poor, who have, no less than the rich, the king's image upon them." —Bridges.

"One so corrupt as to take a bribe, evinces his high estimate of it by subjection to its influence." —Fausset.

Ex. xxiii. 8; Pr. xviii. 16, xix. 6.

"The heights of Mount Taurus are infested by eagles, who prey upon any cranes that may fly near them. When flying, the crane keeps up a constant cackle. This noise brings the eagles down upon them. It is said that the older cranes, sensible of their weakness, before they venture upon a flight, take a stone in their mouths large enough to enforce silence."

"Force not thyself above, degrade not thyself below thy condition." — Wohlfarth.

a "The warning is directed against the tendency which leads a man to dwell with irritating iteration on a past offense, instead of burying it in oblivon." — Spk. Com.

1 Ti. v. 13.

"Indeed, the more a person is emptied of real worth the more room is there in him for self-inflation."

b "There are some that are actuated by a spirit of opposition, that will contradict for contradiction sake, that will go on frowardly in their wicked ways in spite of all restraint and check." — Mat. Henry.

c 1 Ki. ii. 29 — 34.

be aware of voices which call and hands which reach out to him from his childhood, connecting him with heaven, and even the most convincing negations of unbelief will be powerless to shake the faith which is deep as the springs of his life.—Harper.

7, 8. (7) Excellent speech, better as R. V. marg. "arrogant speech." A nabal, a "vicious fool," ought not to flaunt his unwisdom and his iniquities before the eyes of men, but to keep them hidden as much as possible. lying lips, such as could not be trusted or relied on. prince, or noble, princely-minded. To such, crafty sly artifices of speech are very unbecoming. (8) gift,[b] bribe. "The gnome expresses the idea that a bribe is like a bright jewel that dazzles the sight and affects the mind of him who receives it." The tone of this verse is half satirical. precious stone, dazzling the eyes of him that receives it. turneth, a well-cut jewel sparkles in every direction. "Wheresoever he turneth himself he dealeth wisely."—Delitzsch, i. e. the craven ally works hard to please his master. "Inflamed by sordid hopes and the love of gain, he acts with all possible skill and prudence in order to work out his wages and show that he was rightly selected to receive the present. The verse merely states a common trait among unscrupulous men, and pronounces no judgment upon it."—Pul. Com.

Truth Rewarded.—Hegiage was a celebrated Arabian warrior, but ferocious and cruel. Among a number of prisoners whom he had condemned to death was one who, having obtained a moment's audience, said, "You ought, sir, to pardon me, because, when Abdarrahman was cursing you, I represented to him that he was wrong; and ever since that time I have lost his friendship." Hegiage asked him if he had any witness of his having done this; and the soldier mentioned another prisoner, who was likewise about to suffer death. The prisoner was called and interrogated, and, having confirmed the fact, Hegiage granted the first his pardon. He then asked the witness if he had likewise taken his part against Abdarrahman. But he, still respecting truth, answered that he had not, because he believed it was not his duty to do so. Hegiage, notwithstanding his ferocity, was struck with the prisoner's greatness of spirit. "Well," said he, after a moment's pause, "suppose I were to grant you life and liberty, should you still be my enemy?" "No," said the prisoner. "That's enough," said Hegiage; "your bare word is sufficient; you have given undoubted proof of your love for truth. Go, preserve the life that is less dear to you than honor and sincerity; your liberty is the just reward of your virtue."

9, 10. (9) covereth, casteth a veil over it: is unwilling to blazon it abroad, but helps the sinner to recover himself from it. seeketh love, tries to act on the principle of "charity," wh. "hideth a multitude of sins." repeateth, etc., R. V. "harpeth on;" spreads evil report.[a] separateth, etc., comp. ch. xvi. 28. (10) reproof, wh. is correction by counsel. entereth, Heb. "aweth;" has a more gracious and humbling influence upon. more, R. V. "deeper."

Feuds.—He that always returns to old grievances separateth very friends; that is to say, he cannot let a matter rest; he must go again and again to it; even when it is apparently buried, he must exhume it, and dwell upon its enormity, and show how impossible it is to overlook a transgression so great. Sometimes men forgive sins or errors on the part of others, but their friends insist upon keeping up the old feud, saying that whatever the original sufferer may have pardoned or overlooked, his friends must insist upon inflicting penalty upon the offender. There would be more forgiveness in the world were controversies confined to the two parties immediately interested in them; but friends or outsiders or critics will make note of the matter, and irritate and exaggerate and do all in their power to make every sore a continually open wound. The one cure for this is baptism into the Spirit of Christ, a full and glowing realization of the presence of Christ in all the thought and intention of life.—Parker.

11, 12. (11) evil man, or a contumacious person.[b] rebellion, is always on the outlook for opportunity of raising insurrection. cruel messenger,[c] "the king's officer sent to punish him." (12) bear . . whelps, the strongest type of brute ferocity. in his folly, i. e. in one of his paroxysms of passion.

Phases of Evil.—I. The main characteristic of a sinner is that he is a rebel against the moral order of the universe. II. A sinner is a restless being. III. A sinner is an injurious man. IV. A sinner is an ungrateful being. V. God will, sooner or later, call His rebellious subjects to account. VI. The sinner brings evil upon his posterity.—Hom. Com.

A Bear Robbed of her Whelps.—The furious passions of the female bear never mount so high, nor burn so fiercely, as when she happens to be deprived of her young. When she returns to her den, and misses the objects of her love and care, she becomes almost frantic with rage. Disregarding every consideration of danger to herself, she attacks with intense ferocity every animal that comes in her way, "and, in the bitterness of her heart, will dare to attack even a band of armed men." "A more desperate attempt, therefore, can scarcely be performed than to carry off her young in her absence. The moment she returns and misses them her passions are inflamed; her scent enables her to track the plunderer; and unless he has reached some place of safety before the infuriated animal overtake him, his only safety is in dropping one of the cubs, and continuing to flee; for the mother, attentive to its safety, carries it home to her den before she renews the pursuit." Dreadful as it is to meet a bear in such circumstances, it is yet more dangerous to meet a "fool in his folly," a furious and revengeful man, under the influence of his impetuous passions, and his heart determined on their immediate gratification. It is possible to escape the vengeance of a bereaved bear by surrendering part of the litter, and diverting part of her pursuit; but no consideration of interest or duty, no partial gratifications, can arrest his furious career, or divert his attention. Reason, degraded and enslaved, lends all her remaining wisdom and energy to passion, and renders the fool more cruel and mischievous than the bear, in proportion as she is superior to instinct.—Paxton.

"Had I a careful and pleasant companion, that would show me my angry face in a glass, I should not at all take it ill. To behold a man's self so unnaturally disguised and disordered will conduce not a little to the impeachment of anger." —Plutarch.

"A door of mercy! and a ransom fixed for sin! and only one class to fail! and they spontaneously rebels! These are the men that go in search of evil, and this is the meaning of the wise man." —Miller.

13, 14. (13) evil for good,[a] evil in the sense of injury. evil .. house, evil in the sense of misfortune. "The punishments of ingratitude descend to a man's posterity."—Nicholls. (14) letteth out water, when the water first trickles over the dam it can be easily remedied, but when it has eaten away the dam then the torrent rushes through.[b] meddled with, R. V. "before there be quarrelling;" "before it waxes warm."—Gesenius. "Before it shows its teeth."—Hitzig.

[a] Comp. Ro. xii. 17; 1 Th. v. 15; 1 Pe. iii. 9. "To render good for evil is Divine; good for good is human; evil for evil is brutish; evil for good is devilish." — Bridges.

[b] "He who begins strife is like him that tears away the dam fr. the waters." —Luther.

15, 16. (15) justifieth, etc., a forensic term meaning to declare righteous: i. e. he who treats the unjust as though he were just, and the just as though he were unjust. So confusing moral relations. abomination, or abhorrence. (16) price, or wealth. Render, "Why is there a price in the hand of a fool? Is it to get wisdom when he has no heart for it?"[c] i. e. wisdom cannot be purchased for any price.

[c] "Why is he, as it were, sent into the market with so much money in his hand for buying wisdom, and his heart is not set on the purchase?" —Wordsworth.

17, 18. (17) friend, etc., ch. xviii. 24. a brother, better, he is a brother, more than a friend, in the time of adversity. R. V. marg. "and is born as a brother for adversity." born for, the time of adversity brings him out and shows him at his best. Stuart reads, "a brother for adversity must be born," i. e. none such are now to be found. (18) striketh hands, in making bargains, without duly weighing the responsibilities under wh. he comes. in .. friend, R. V. "neighbour;" who can be a witness and make the pledge obligatory.

A Brother's Highest Use (vs. 17).—I. Adversity is the common lot of brotherhood. II. The ties of brotherhood are formed for adversity. III. Adversity tends to sanctify the intercourse of the brotherhood. IV. In adversity we are led to know, in an especial manner, the presence of the Elder Brother with the brotherhood. V. It is by adversity that the whole brotherhood are gathered at last into our Father's house above.—Studies for the Pulpit.

Friendship.—A friend shares my sorrow and makes it but a moiety; but he swells my joy and makes it double. For so two channels divide the river and lessen it into rivulets and make it fordable, and apt to drink up at the first revels of the Syrian star; but two torches do not divide, but increase the flame. And though my tears are the sooner dried up when they run on my friend's cheek in furrows of compassion; yet when my flame has kindled his lamp, we unite the glories, and make them radiant, like the golden candlesticks that burn before the throne of God; because they shine by numbers, by unions, and confederations of light and joy."—Jeremy Taylor.

"The essential note of true friendship is invariability of affection."

"The men who go with us into Gethsemane are the men who are our truest friends."

19—21. (19) loveth strife, Jas. i. 20. The quarrelsome involve themselves in guilt. exalteth his gate,[a] R. V. "raiseth high," builds a stately house; a sign of ambition and arrogancy. destruction, it is as if he did, for he surely makes himself conspicuous to the robber, etc. (20) froward, etc., comp. ch. xi. 20, xvi. 28. perverse tongue, i. e. turned hither and thither, says one thing today, and something contrary tomorrow. (21) fool, first clause kesil, conceited, offensive, folly; second clause, nabal, dull, stupid child.

Danger of Ambition.—Matthew Henry gives the general bearing of this passage when he says, "Those that are ambitious and aspiring expose themselves to a great deal of trouble, such as many times ends in their ruin. He that exalteth his gate builds a stately house, at least a fine frontispiece, that he may overtop and outshine his neighbors; he seeks his own destruction, and takes a deal of pains to ruin himself; he makes his gate so large, that his house and estate go out at it." The moral here suggested is, that extravagance leads to ruin; or, it may be, that the most humble are the most safe. It is the practice of the Arabs to ride on horseback into the houses of those they intend to plunder, and hence the doors are designedly built low to prevent the intrusion. Thus a French abbé, describing his admission into a monastery near Jerusalem, says, "The passage is so low that it will scarcely admit a horse, and it is shut by a gate of iron, strongly secured on the inside. As soon as we entered, it was again made fast with various bolts and bars of iron—a precaution extremely necessary in a desert place, exposed to the incursions and insolent attacks of the Arabs." Among the Persians, too, the same defensive measures are employed, in order "to hinder the servants of the great from entering it on horseback, which, when any act of oppression is going on, they would make no scruple to do."—The Quiver.

22, 23. (22) doeth good, R. V. "is a good," ch. xii. 25. medicine, or "promoteth health." broken spirit, broken by afflictions or conscience of sins. drieth the bones, wastes the radical moisture, exhausts the very marrow, destroys all life and vigor. (23) gift, or bribe. bosom, fold of dress where the purse was kept. pervert . . judgment, judges had no stated salary, hence the unprincipled were corruptible.

The Merry Heart.—What will conduce to cheerfulness of spirit? 1. A heart at peace with God. 2. A vivid realization of unseen realities. 3. A life of active love.—Hom. Com.

Cheerfulness.—Give me, Oh, give us the man who sings at his work! Be his occupation what it may, he is equal to any of those who follow the same pursuit in silent sullenness. He will do more in the same time—he will do it better—he will persevere longer. One is scarcely sensible of fatigue whilst he marches to music. The very stars are said to make harmony as they revolve in their spheres. Wondrous is the strength of cheerfulness, altogether past calculation its power of endurance. Efforts to be permanently useful, must be uniformly joyous—a spirit all sunshine—graceful from very gladness—beautiful because bright.—Carlyle. ——Cheerfulness.—Cheerfulness is the best promoter of health. Repinings and secret murmurs of heart, give imperceptible strokes to those delicate fibres of which the vital parts are composed, and wear out the machine insensibly, not to mention those violent ferments which they stir up in the blood, and those irregular disturbed motions which they raise in the animal spirits. I scarce remember in my own observation, to have met with many old men, or with such who (to use our English phrase) wear well, that had not at least a certain indolence in their humor, if not a more than ordinary gaiety and cheerfulness of heart. The truth of it is, health and cheerfulness mutually beget each other; with this difference, that we seldom meet with a great degree of health which is not attended with a certain cheerfulness, but very often see cheerfulness where there is no great degree of health.—Addison. If any man has springs of cheerfulness and of good nature in him, in the name of God of benevolence, let him not stop them up. Let him rather keep them open that they may be a source of joy and consolation to his fellow-men.—Beecher.

"True friends visit us in prosperity only when invited, but in adversity they come without invitation."—Theophrastus.

"Friendship contracted with the wicked decreases from hour to hour, like the early shadow of the morning; but friendship formed with the virtuous will increase like the shadow of evening till the sun of life shall set."—Herder.

[a] "Private houses were sometimes built ostentatiously with a lofty gateway, wh. would naturally breed jealousy in the neighbors, and invite the visits of the tax-gatherer; and in a time when law was weak and property very unsafe, might easily lead to the ruin of its owner."—Sharpe.

"High towers must look for lightning."

[b] Lit. "A merry heart giveth a happy heating."

"Those who live on high lands and breathe the pure mountain air, are conscious of an exuberance of animal life, of which even perfectly healthy people who live in the valleys know nothing. So, men who live in the higher regions of spiritual life know a "joy in God"—are sensible of an uplifting of spirit—to which ordinary and everyday Christians are strangers."—Preacher'sCom.

24, 25. (24) before, i. e. in the sight of; in the presence of. understanding, i. e. the discerning man. ends .. earth, the fool is looking everywhere, dissipating his powers, and never accomplishing anything. (25) grief, or cross, vexation, see vs. 21.

Authority of Parents.—It is a great mistake to suppose that what will make a child stare, or tremble, impresses more authority. The violent emphasis, the hard, stormy voice, the menacing air, only weakens authority; it commands a good thing as if it were only a bad, and fit to be no way impressed, save by some stress of assumption. Let the command be always given quietly, as if it had some right in itself and could utter itself to the conscience by some emphasis of its own. Is it not well understood that a bawling and violent teamster has no real government of his team? Is it not practically seen that a skilful commander of one of those huge floating cities, moved by steam on our American waters, manages and works every motion by the waving of a hand, or by signs that pass in silence—issuing no order at all, save in the gentlest undertone of voice? So when there is, or is to be, a real order and law in the house, it will come of no hard and boisterous, or fretful and termagent way of commandment. Gentleness will speak the word of firmness, and firmness will be clothed in the airs of true gentleness.—Bushnell.

26. punish, R. V. marg. "fine." is not good, i. e. is very wicked, just as we say "not a few" when we mean "many." for equity, better read, "is not equity." To strike one who is noble is against right. It may, however, mean to strike a prince for judging right.

Condemning the Just.—Those who have thus unjustly condemned the righteous, have found in their own personal experience that "to punish the just is not good"—not good for their own peace of mind—not good for their future reputation—not good for the nation who instigated them or permitted them to do the deed. Haman found that it was not good for him to aim a blow at the upright Mordecai when he was himself hanged upon his own gallows; the Persian princes found it was not good to strike a prince for equity when they were themselves cast into the den of lions; Judge Jeffries found it out when he lay face to face with death in the Tower. And among all the nations whose history has confirmed the truth of the text, none stands out so prominently as that one whose king was the author of the proverb. The punishment of the just—the striking of moral princes for equity—was one of the most prominent of their national crimes, and He whose death at their hands filled up the measure of their iniquity, declared that it was the great cause of their national ruin. (Matt. xxiii. 29—35). The Jewish nation has been for nearly nineteen centuries a witness that "to punish the just is not good, nor to strike princes for equity."—Hom. Com.

27, 28. (27) spareth, does not give them forth too freely.[a] excellent, or cool spirit; calm, considerate. (28) holdeth his peace, does not utter and show what is in him, may pass for a wise man. Silence is good.[b] The man who says little may learn much. The man who is constantly talking learns little.

Speech.—Considering what mischief may be done with the tongue, it is not to be wondered at that we are cautioned against excessive speech. "In the multitude of words there wanteth not transgression, but he that refraineth his lips doeth wisely." One who is always pouring out talk is sure to be pouring out folly. The wise man, feeling that all his words must be tested and weighed, is not able to talk very much. When your money is all in copper, you may afford to throw it about, but when it is all in gold you have to be cautious. A Christian feels that for every idle word he utters he will have to give account, and as none of his words are to be idle they must be comparatively few. Shall we not put our lips under our Lord's control, that the answer of our tongue may be from Him? While we seek daily to subject our hearts to Him, shall we not in a peculiar and a direct manner subject our tongues, to Him? for while a subjected heart may keep the mouth from speaking evil, if the tongue is to speak well and to be employed for all its noble uses it must be immediately moved by God, our lips must be touched with a coal from the "Cheerful Christians are strong Christians; for 'the joy of the Lord is your strength.'" Neh. viii. 10.

"We can do our work best when we do it gladly."

"Thou art the only comfort of my age: like an old tree, I stand amongst the storms; thou art the only limb that I have left me, my dear green branch! and how I prize thee, child, heaven only knows."—Lee.

"In exalting the faculties of the soul, we annihilate, in a great degree, the delusion of the senses." —Aime Marten.

"To be perfectly just is an attribute of Divine nature; to be so to the utmost of our abilities, is the glory of man." — Addison.

"When one struck our Henry VI., he only said, 'Forsooth, you do wrong yourself more than me, to strike the Lord's anointed!'" —Trapp.

[a] "The more a man knows the less he is apt to talk; for his wisdom gives him such an excellent composure of spirit that it represses his heat, his forwardness and haste, and makes him coolly deliberate what and when it is fit to speak."—Bp. Patrick.

[b] "Silence may be eloquence, and speak thy worth above the power of words."—Sir Thos. Browne.

"If the silence of the wise is wisdom, much more is a tongue-tied condition expedient for a fool."—Jacox.

altar, our speech must be chastened and purified, inspired and impelled, by Him.—Exp. B.

CHAPTER THE EIGHTEENTH.

1. Through .. wisdom, R. V. "he that separateth himself seeketh his own desire, and rageth against all sound wisdom," i. e. "through self-love a man, having separated himself, seeks only his own interest, rebels against all wisdom;" cares nothing for counsel, but is hurried on recklessly by his wilfulness towards his own private ends.—Wordsworth. Interpretations, however, greatly differ. Comp. the margin.

The Separated.—The most appalling discovery in a great city is that multitudes have become mere selves,—hungry, hollow, ravening, thirsty, shrivelled selves. The father and mother are dead, or left far away, probably never known; no one is brother to them, they are brothers to no one. Friend has no significance to their understanding, or means only one who, from most interested motives, ministers to their craving appetites; they are not citizens of London, nor of any other city; they are not Englishmen, though they were born in England, nor have they any other nationality,—hideous, clamorous, esurient selves, nothing more. . . . It becomes therefore a necessity to every wise human being to recognize, to maintain, and to cultivate all those wholesome relationships which make us truly human. "As a bird that wandereth from her nest, so is a man that wandereth from his place." Sometimes when a great ship is far off in mid-ocean, a tired land-bird will fall panting and exhausted upon the deck: the wings can beat no longer; the eyes glaze; and the eager wanderer fails and dies. The true bird-life is the life of the woods, of the toilsomely-woven nest, of the mate and the brood and the fledglings. In the same way on those ocean steamers—ay, and in many a weary bye-path and lonely desert of the earth—may be found men who have broken away from the ties which formed their strength and their truer being, and now fall, faint and purposeless, to languish and to die. For true human life is the life of our fellows, of the diligent laborious housebuilding, of the home, of the young, of the rising nestlings which are to form the next link in the long chain of the generations.—Exp. B.

2, 3. (2) understanding, in getting knowledge, especially self-knowledge, which makes a man modest and humble. discover itself, R. V. "reveal," by overmuch and foolish talk, about himself and his opinions, which only display his folly.[a] (3) also contempt,[b] lxx., "when the wicked cometh into the depth of evil, he turns a despiser," i. e. of all that is good and pure. ignominy, or baseness, the inward condition fr. wh. wicked acts spring. reproach, wh. is the manifestation of the contempt felt for those who impede the sinner in his evil courses.

Wickedness (vs. 3).—The words suggest—I. That wickedness is a contemptible thing. 1. When it comes into political life it brings contempt on the nation; 2. When it comes into ecclesiastical life it brings contempt upon the Church. II. It is a contemptuous thing.—Thomas.

Sin Not Forsaken Leads to Desperation.—As he who is plunged into a well is confined to the bottom of it, so would the mind fall in, and remain, as it were, at the bottom, if, after having once fallen, it were to confine itself within any measure of sin. But when it cannot be contented with the sin into which it has fallen, while it is daily plunging into worse offences, it finds, as it were, no bottom to the well into which it has fallen, on which to rest. For there would be a bottom to the well, if there were any bounds to his sin. Whence it is well said, "When a sinner hath come into the lowest depth of sins, he contemneth." For he puts by returning, because he has no hope that he can be forgiven. But when he sins still more through despair, he withdraws, as it were, the bottom from the well, so as to find therein no resting-place.—St. Gregory.

4, 5. (4) deep waters, difficult to fathom and exhaust.[a] A description true only of the words of discreet and wise men. well spring, the second hemistich explains the first. "A man's words are now called a wellspring of wisdom, gushing forth from its source, the wise and under-

"Even triviality, imbecility, that can sit silent, how respectable is it in comparison with the vapid verbiage of shallow praters!" —Carlyle.

"The precept may be taken as a warning against self-will and the self-assertion wh. exults in differing from the received customs and opinions of mankind."—Spk. Com.

"Other com. take the expression in an unsocial and misanthropic spirit, 'separates himself from intercourse with others,' 'separateth himself,' as Zockler.

"The recluse seeks his own pleasure or inclination; he laughs at or derides everything solid or wise."—Parkhurst.

"By all means use sometimes to be alone;
Salute thyself: see what thy soul doth wear;
Dare to look in thy chest, for 'tis thine own,
And tumble up and down what thou find'st there."
—Geo. Herbert.

[a] Comp. Pr. vii. 23, xiii. 16, xv. 2, etc.

[b] Pr. xi. 2.

"Education, indeed, has made the fondness for fine things next to natural: the corals and bells teach infants on the breast to be delighted with sound and glitter."-H. Brooke.

"The mortal who is himself most disgraced, shows the readiest mind to cry shame upon and to reproach and that even the Most High."

[a] Pr. xx.5; Ecc. vii. 24.

standing heart, pure, fresh, and inexhaustible." flowing brook, one that never dries up, but continually pours down its refreshing streams.[b] The wise man's speech is clean and fresh, cleansing and refreshing. (5) accept the person, to take sides with him; show unjust favor to him. to overthrow, R. V. "nor to turn aside." To disregard their plea, and favor unjustly the wicked.[c] "To give sentence against a righteous man whose cause the judge knows to be just."

Three Bad Things (vs. 5).—I. Voluntary connection with wicked men is bad—1. Matrimonially; 2. Mercantilely; 3. Politically; 4. Ecclesiastically. II. The overthrow of good men. 1. Sometimes in social life; 2. Sometimes in judicial courts. III. The overthrow of good men by the employment of the wicked. Learn:—1. Shun the wicked; 2. Adhere to the righteous.—Thomas.

Disputes.—A gentleman who was in company with Mr. Newton lamented the violent disputes that often take place among Christians respecting the non-essentials of Christianity, and particularly Church government. "Many," he said, "seem to give their chief attention to such topics, and take more pleasure in talking on these disputable points, than on spiritual religion, the love of Christ, and the privileges of His people." "Sir," said the venerable old man, "did you ever see a whale ship? I am told that when the fish is struck with the harpoon, and feels the smart of the wound, it sometimes makes for the boat, and would probably dash it to pieces. To prevent this, they throw a cask overboard; and when it is staved to pieces they throw over another." "Now sir," added Mr. Newton, "Church government is the tub which Satan throws out to the people of whom you speak."—R. T. S.

6, 7. (6) into contention,[a] they lead him into disputes and quarrellings.[b] for strokes, or stripes. He says such things as deserve to be punished with stripes. (7) destruction, brings on him destruction. snare, in the figure of the huntsman; bringing his life into danger.[c]

The Fool's Tongue (vss. 6, 7).—I. Its characteristics. 1. Haste; "enters into contention;" 2. Ignorant: "calleth," etc. II. Its fruit; destruction. Destroys any reputation for wisdom he may accidentally gain; exposes his character.

Contention.—It may seem a very insignificant deed to strike a flint and steel together so as to produce a single spark, but one spark may produce a terrible and destructive fire. When a settler in a forest rubs two dry sticks together the act seems a trifling one, but the friction in time develops the latent heat of the wood, and there is enough fire brought into activity to lay low many a mighty forest tree. None but foolish men and children ever play with fire, and when they do it they generally suffer themselves first, but they are often not the only sufferers. So it is with contention, or a dispute in words. Wise men are often obliged to contend for truth and right, but they never seek an occasion of dispute. But there are moral fools who think it only an amusement to pick a quarrel, little heeding what the consequences of it may be, not caring if blows succeed to angry words, or perhaps even desiring that they should do so. But although a man may play with fire and escape unharmed, or may even apply a torch to his neighbor's house without singeing so much as a hair of his own head, no fool's lips enter into contention or call for strokes without bringing retribution upon his own head. "His mouth," is his own "destruction," and "his lips are the snare of his soul," for it is a law as old as the universe that "with what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you again" (Matt. vi. 1, 2). The man who seeks contention will always find others like-minded with himself who will be willing to do for him what he has done for others, and he who "calls for strokes" upon his fellow-creatures will receive them upon his own head with compound interest.—Hom. Com.

8, 9. (8) talebearer, or whisperer, ch. xvi. 28: backbiter. wounds, R. V. "dainty morsels," only too readily welcomed, and, once admitted, gaining a central settled place.[d] innermost parts, lit. chambers: recesses of man's nature; there to be stored up for mischievous use. (9) slothful, R. V. "slack." brother, or one in effect, just like. waster,[e] who uselessly squanders what he does get. "Wastefulness implies a lack of that sense of individual responsibility apart from which there is no virtue.—Thomas.

[b] "Wise speech is like an exhaustless stream of benefit." — Fausset.

[c] De. i. 16, 17; Le. xix. 15.

[a] Comp. Pr. xix. 29.

[b] "I consider your very testy and quarrelsome people in the same light I do a loaded gun, wh. may by accident go off and kill me."—Shenstone.

[c] "When a fool, by his foolish speaking, has run himself into a premunire, and thinks to bring himself off by justifying or excusing what he has said, his defence proves his offence, and his lips are still the snare of his soul, entangling him yet more and more." — Matt. Henry.

[d] "Sol. is here describing the greedy avidity with which some men gulp down slander and calumny, as if they were dainty and delicious viands; and the care with wh. they retain them, and lay them up as in a chamber or storeroom, as if they were something wholesome and precious, although they come from the mouth of one whom they know to be a talebearer and backbiter." —Wordsworth.

[e] Lit. master of wasting, i.e. a great prodigal.

"The moral atmosphere in which we live should be so pure that no talebearer could live in it."—Parker.

Wasting.—Time is the most precious thing in the world. When God gives us a moment, He does not promise us another, as if to teach us highly to value and improve it, by the consideration, for aught we know, it may be the last. Time, when gone, never returns. We talk about "fetching up" a lost hour, but the thing is impossible. A moment once lost, is lost forever. We could as rationally set out to find a sound that had expired in air, as to find a lost moment.—J. A. James.

10, 11. (10) name, put for the Div. essence and attributes; all that God is in himself, his love, power, knowledge; wh. allow man to regard him as a sure refuge. The name Jehovah is the covenant name wh. pledges God's love and care.[a] strong tower, comp. Ps. xviii. 2, xxvii. 1, cxliv. 2. safe, or set aloft; up above danger. (11) wealth, here put in contrast with the name of God. own conceit, or imagination. Wealth is no real defence. It is very apt to fail us in the evil day. Trust in it is but building our house upon the sand.[b] a "The name always designates God Himself, as man knows Him, as he receives Him to his knowledge and faith, and bears Him in his heart." —Rucetschi.

b Mat. vii. 24—27.

"God always provides a light through every one of his tunnels. A tunnel is the safest part of the road, because unusual care is used in passing through it." — Christian Standard.

"Dangerous conceits are in their nature poisons, which at the first are scarce found to distaste, but with a little act upon the blood, burn like the mines of sulphur." — Shakespeare.

"Men succeed only when they have fallen into line with God's plan for them." —R. E. Speer.

"We must look up for shelter. We must climb to God. Our safety is in aspiration."

God's Interposition.—In a Western cabin, far away from all other residences, there sat a Christian mother rocking her babe to sleep. The husband and the father had been called suddenly off on business, and there had been no defence provided for that house that night in the wilderness. As the mother sat there in the cabin rocking her babe to sleep, miles away from any other tenement, glancing to the floor she saw a ruffian's foot projecting from under the table. Having rocked her child to sleep she put him in the cradle, and then knelt down and said: "Oh! Lord, keep this child; keep me. Oh! Thou who never slumbereth, watch over our cabin to-night. Let no harm come to us. If there be those abroad who wish us ill, bring them to a better mind. The Lord have mercy upon all wanderers, all who do deeds of violence and death. Bring them to Thyself—bring them to pardon and to heaven." As she arose from the prayer the ruffian came out from under the table and said: "There will be no harm to you to-night. Pray for me, I am the wanderer that you spoke of. Pray for me." Years passed on, and that Christian woman sat in a great meeting called in the interest of reform. There was a great orator that day to be present, and as he preached righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, his eye fell upon the countenance of that woman. His cheek was blanched and he almost failed in his speech. At the close of the meeting they joined hands, and a few words of conversation passed, and some one said: "Why, where did you form the acquaintance of that orator?" "Never mind," she said, "I have known him many years." Who was it watching the mother that night? Who was it watching the babe? Who was it that brought the ruffian to God in repentance for his sin? Who is it that watches all our cradles, and all our tables, and all our homes, and all our way? Blessed be His glorious name for ever. He is a shelter to which we may all run. He is a fortress in which we may all be safe.—Talmage.

12, 13. (12) Before destruction, etc., comp. ch. xvi. 18. honour, etc., comp. ch. xv. 33. (13) answereth,[a] the evil indicated here is impetuous flippancy. "Secularly, this is beyond a doubt; judicially, here is a great outrage; socially, a something very impolite; but religiously, a thing altogether a 'shame.'"—Miller.

a "Cultivate self-control, free the mind from all prepossessions, shake off all mental sloth, 'be not wise in your own conceits,' and then you will listen fully to a matter before you will make an answer." — Dav. Thomas.

"Those who take a pride in being quick commonly fall under the just reproach of being impertinent." — Mat. Henry.

Job xxxii. 4, 10, 11.

Answering Before Hearing (vs. 13).—I. How this is done. 1. When one only sees that which seems the sign of something and is not; 2. When only a part of the matter is heard; 3. When what is heard is the utterance of malice, etc. II. Why is doing so a folly and shame? 1. It exposes the hastiness of his temper; 2. The sentence he pronounces on insufficient evidence has to be reversed, or remains as a proof of his want of justice.

Humility the Entrance to Honor.—In Caius College, Cambridge, there are three gateways in succession: "the first is called Humilitatis, the next Virtutis, the third (which opens towards the Senate House) Honoris. Not in vain did our forefathers make these emblems of an under-graduate's progress; and happy would it be if every youth entered by the gate of humility, to pass through the gate of Christian virtue, that he might come forth in the highest sense to that of honor.—R. F. Walker.

Honor of Humility.—

The bird that soars on highest wing
Builds on the ground her lowly nest;
And she that doth most sweetly sing
Sings in the shade when all things rest;
In lark and nightingale we see
What honor hath humility.

When Mary chose the "better part,"
She meekly sat at Jesus' feet;
And Lydia's gently opened heart
Was made for God's own temple meet;
Fairest and best adorned is she Whose clothing is humility.

The saint that wears heaven's brightest crown
In deepest adoration bends;
The weight of glory bows him down
The most when most his soul ascends; Nearest the throne itself must be
The footstool of humility.—Montgomery.

14, 15. (14) spirit, the highest faculty in man; here a "firm, resolute temper of mind." The word as used in the first clause of the verse is masculine; as used in the second clause it is feminine, as if to intimate that it had lost its manly strength.—Zöckler. sustain, etc., or support his sickness. wounded, R. V., "broken." (15) heart . . ear, these are connected. The ear is the external agent in gaining knowledge, the heart, or mind, works within, studying the material stored. Both are conceived as ever earnestly active.

The Unbearable Wound (vs. 14).—Physical sufferings are endurable, so are merely mental sufferings; but this unbearable wound is moral; the wound of remorse, compunction, etc., the wound that Cain and Judas felt. Why? I. Because it disqualifies the mind from availing itself of any of the ordinary means of support. 1. As a consciousness of rectitude; 2. An unshaken confidence in God; 3. An assurance of the unavoidableness of suffering; 4. Hope in a brighter future; 5. The expressions of friendly sympathy. II. Because it impels the mind to use its chief faculties to enhance its agony. It directs thought, memory and conscience to—1. The crimes of the past; 2. The retributive judgment of the future.—Thomas.

Patience.—So many things fall out contrary unto our minds every day, that he who wants patience in this world is like a man who stands trembling in a field without his armor, because every one can strike him and he can strike none. So the least push of pain, or loss, or disgrace, troubles that man more who has not skill to suffer, than twenty trials can move him who is armed with patience, like a golden shield in his hand, to break the stroke of every cross, and save the heart though the body suffers. For while the heart is whole, all is well. "A sound spirit," says Solomon, "will bear his infirmity, but a wounded spirit what can sustain?"—Henry Smith.

16. gift, the meaning here is: "the present wh. duty or friendship offers to one whom one wishes to please."—Pul. Com. maketh room, acts like the "friend at court," to introduce him to high places.[a] There are two kinds of gifts, the bribe and the gift of kindness. great men, "the Oriental custom of offering suitable gifts to one in authority, when a favor or an audience is desired, is here alluded to."

The Price of Admission (vs. 16).—I. What is here referred to as an object of desire? The presence of great men: the miserable jealousies of such. II. The means to the end: bribes. 1. The gift of money to the underling; 2. Of flattery to the great one whose presence is coveted. III. The gift of knowledge, etc., will introduce us to the only great men whose acquaintance is worth having. Note—1. The ways by which some men will crawl into favor; 2. How much great men, who think they are the rulers of the world, are under the influence of underlings.

"It is hard starving this sin: there is nothing but it can live on; nothing so base that a proud heart will not be lifted up with, and nothing so sacred but it will profane, even dare to drink in the bowls of the sanctuary; nay, rather than starve, it will feed on the carcasses of other sins." —Gurnall.

"It is surprising with what agility this spirit of self-conceit gets over difficulties. It sees none—no, never." — Hom. Com.

[b] "The spirit, which sustains, being wounded, no support is left, except, as implied, in God." —Fausset.

"This Prov. shows the need of the grace of God for the continual strengthening and lifting up of the spirit of man, and is a sequel to vs. 10." — Wordsworth.

"One of the sweet things about pain and sorrow is that they show us how well we are loved; how much kindness there is in the world; and how easily we can make others happy in the same way, when they need help and sympathy." — Louisa M. Alcott.

[a] "The gift goeth like a lacquey before him, and ushers him into the great man's presence, and prepares a seat for him on the divan at the great man's side."—Wordsworth.

"Referring to Jacob's offering for the appeasing of Esau, it is said, 'Jacob did not miscalculate the influence of his princely offerings,' and I verily believe there is not an ameer or sheikh in all Gilead, at this day, who would not be appeased by such presents." — Thomson.

17. first, R. V., "He that pleadeth his cause first," or has the first telling of his tale. own cause, brought before the judge. A matter of dispute or controversy. just, he who makes out a plausible case, and seems to have the right of it, until his statements are tested and compared. One-sided statements are rarely reliable. neighbour, the other party concerned in the matter. searcheth him, by giving his very different representation of the case, wh. demands a new examination of the matter at issue, and compels the first man to be cross-examined.[a] Social Disputes (vs. 17).—I. Their settlement requires the hearing both disputants. A fact may be dealt with falsely. 1. By denial; 2. By omission; 3. By addition. II. A mutual agreement to abide by a certain test to terminate the dispute. III. The bitterness of disputes often aggravated by blood-relationships. 1. Great love has been wounded; 2. Great services have been ill-requited; 3. Great hopes are frustrated; 4. Great reluctance on the offender's side to acknowledge the fault and seek reconciliation.—Thomas.

[a] "One tale is good till another is told. This appears true in private conversation, in lawsuits, before judges, and in theological controversies, and suggests the importance of hearing both sides." — Nicholls.

18, 19. (18) lot, ch. xvi. 33. This was regarded as an appeal to the direct decision of God; and this ought at once to settle any vexed question. parteth .. mighty, "keeps from hostile collision those who in reliance on their physical strength might be specially inclined to quarrel." Arbitration takes now the position of the old lot. (19) brother, quarrels between relatives are proverbially bitter. Here an alienated or litigious brother. bars .. castle, hard to thrust back or to burst.[a] Comp. 1 Sa. xv. 13 and 26; 2 Sa. xvi. 1—3 and xix. 26.

[a] The closer the relationship in cases of dispute, the wider the breach, and the more difficult the reconciliation.

Decision by Lot.—John Patton, the missionary to the New Hebrides, uncertain whether to go back to Scotland and plead for more missionaries, and receiving no light from human counsel, says, "After many prayers and wrestlings and tears, I went alone before the Lord, and on my knees cast lots with a solemn appeal to God, and the answer came 'Go home.' In my heart I believe that . . . the Lord condescended to decide for me the path of duty, otherwise unknown; and I believe it the more truly now, in view of the aftercome of thirty years of service to Christ that flowed out of the steps then deliberately and devoutly taken." Autobiography.——In nearly all cases where reason cannot decide, or where the right of several claimants to one article has to be settled, recourse is had to the lot, which "causeth contentions to cease." Though an Englishman might not relish such a mode of having a wife assigned to him, yet many a one in the East has no other guide than this in that important acquisition. Not long ago the son of a medical man and another youth applied for the daughter of Sedambara-Suppiyan, the rich merchant. The old gentleman caused two "holy writings" to be drawn up; the names of the lovers were inscribed thereon: the son of Kandan, the doctor, was drawn forth, and the young lady became his wife.—Roberts.

"Whoever is afraid of submitting any question, civil or religious, to the test of free discussion, is more in love with his own opinion than with truth." —Bp. Watson.

20, 21. (20) man's belly, etc., ch. xii. 14, xiii. 2. Belly is used to represent the "inward man." "The words may be rendered,—a man's moral self shall be satisfied."—Thomas. fruit of his mouth, words which flow from it: but to this end his speech should be conscientiously truthful, and intentionally useful; a man must accept the consequences of his words, good or evil. (21) Death .. tongue, see Jas. iii. 5.[a] The tongue may be an agent in the greatest good or the greatest evil. love it, i. e. the tongue: they who use it much must abide the consequences of their words, whether they contribute to life or involve the speaker and others in immortal sin.—Pul. Com.

"The sweeter the wine, the sharper the vinegar; and the greater the natural love, the more violent the hate where that love has been injured."

[a] Many have fallen by the edge of the sword, but not so many as have fallen by the tongue.

The Tongue (vs. 21).—I. Look at the tongue as an instrument of the mind. 1. As the communicator of thought; 2. As a link of fellowship; 3. As the great agent in active life. II. Look at the tongue as influenced by will. 1. The flattering; 2. The lying; 3. The impure; 4. The malignant; 5. The proud; 6. The profane; 7. The cursing; 8. The blaspheming tongue. III. Look at the renewed and sanctified tongue. 1. It is wise; 2. Wholesome; 3. Truthful; 4. Restrained; 5. Benevolent; 6. Devotional; 7. Praising tongue. Learn—(1) The tongue is the most difficult of management; (2) The most important; (3) The tongue of the sainted soul will glorify Him for ever.—Burns.

"Let us guard this little member—the tongue—more than the pupil of the eye, and the more cautious we should be bec. we are of unclean lips."—St. Chrysostom.

Matt. xii. 36, 37.

"When a man's general conversation is such as to procure for him a character for discretion,

A Word in Season.—The views of the Rev. Martin Boos, a late Catholic clergyman in Austria, though afterwards decidedly evangelical, were at the commencement of his ministry erroneous. About the year 1788 he went to visit a woman distinguished by her humility and piety, who was dangerously ill. In endeavoring to prepare her for death, he said to her, "I doubt not but you will die calm and happy." "Wherefore?" asked the sick woman. "Because your life has all been made up of a series of good works." The sick woman sighed: "If I die," said she, "confiding in the good works which you call to my recollection, I know for certain that I shall be condemned; but what renders me calm at this solemn hour is, that I trust solely in Jesus Christ my Saviour." "These few words," said Boos, "from the mouth of a dying woman, who was reputed a saint, opened my eyes for the first time. I learned what that was—'Christ for us.' Like Abraham, I saw His day. From that time I announced to others the Saviour of sinners whom I had myself found, and there are many who rejoice in Him along with me."—Whitecross.——Death and Life in the Power of the Tongue.—In Mungo Park's relation of his travels in Africa, he gives a striking example of the good effects of Christian forbearance, even among uncivilized men. He says after having passed through the greatest distresses, he arrived at the village of Song, where the people refused to receive him within the gate, though the country was infested with lions. Here Mungo Park with much difficulty collected grass for his horse, and lay down under a tree near the gate; but being aroused by the roar of a lion, he climbed the tree for safety. The inhabitants, who having believed him to be a Moor, would not admit him, notwithstanding the danger that threatened him, till midnight, when convinced of their error, they opened the gate, declaring that no Moor ever waited long at the gate of any city without cursing all the inhabitants.—Old. Test. Anec.

22. findeth a wife, plainly, one who is really a wife; i. e. a good wife;[a] a partner and head of the household, such as she should be, a wife who really stands by her husband's side as a "help meet for him."[b] favour .. Lord, to obtain a good wife is a sign that God delights in a man to do him good.

The Secret of a Happy Home.—No ideal of human life can be more beautiful than that of the happy home. This is obtained: 1. By adaptation. Every woman is not suitable for every man. The choice of a companion for life is not to be lightly undertaken if there is to be any hope of its issuing in happiness. 2. By sympathy. There must be mutual confidence between husband and wife if the marriage is to be one of true and lasting blessedness. It is possible for husbands and wives to share one another's interests and enlarge one another's lives by conceding the fullest mutual confidence. 3. By self-sacrifice. Selfishness is fatal to marriage. Love must learn to give, to suffer, to endure. The happiness is most complete when each seeks it chiefly for the other. 4. By religion. The true marriage must be ratified in heaven.—Pul. Com.——A Good Wife.—There was a young man in Switzerland, engaged in observing and classifying the Hymenoptera of his native land, when he was suddenly smitten with blindness. The calamity was so hopeless that marriage was absolutely forbidden by the father of his beloved. She waited, like a dutiful child, until she was twenty-one years of age; then, without concealment, and, in great sorrow, but honoring her father in disobeying him, she married the scientist, and immediately persuaded him to resume his studies. She carried on his experiments under his direction. She soon became more skillful than he had ever been in watching the operation of the curious creatures. And he became more exact in his generalization, in consequence of being shut up to his own reflections. The result was a work which astonished the world, and remains a classic and the first authority on the subject—the immortal treasure of Huber on bees! What will not the faithful love of a wife accomplish! God in heaven looks down upon nothing on earth so like the paradise above as trustful and helpful married love.—Bib. Ill.

23. intreaties, not violence, wh. his position does not warrant. roughly, his wealth making him masterful.[c] "The rich man not only does wrong, but accompanies the injury with passionate language and courtesy, gratitude, straightforward integrity, and trustworthiness, this may surely contribute, eminently and directly, to the temporal sustenance and comfort of the man himself and his family: while an opposite style of intercourse may tend to penury and starvation."—Wardlaw.

a "A good wife is heaven's last, best gift to a man; his angel of mercy; minister of graces innumerable; his gem of many virtues; his casket of jewels. Her voice his sweetest music; her smiles his brightest day; her kiss the guardian of innocence; her arms the pale of his safety, the balm of his health, the balsam of his life; her industry his surest wealth, her economy his safest steward; her lips his faithful counsellors; her bosom the softest pillow of his cares; and her prayers the ablest advocates of heaven's blessing on his head." —Jeremy Taylor.

b Ge. ii. 18, 20.

"Blessed is the man that has a virtuous wife, for thereby his life is doubled. A woman made for a man rejoices her husband, and he shall fulfil the years of his life in peace. A virtuous wife is a good portion, in the portion of them that fear the Lord shall she be given."—Ecclesiasticus.

c "Here, again, is a paradox. The poor man, of whom one might expect roughness, supplicates; the rich, well-nurtured, from whom one might look for courtesy, answers harshly and roughly." —Spk. Com.

1 Sa. xxv. 11, 12.

"Solomon warns against a vainglorious passion of aspiring to a universal acquaintance, and an empty popularity, wh. will bring with it no support in adversity, but will ruin a man by pride and rashness, and prodigal expenditure." —Wordsworth.

b "The brother and the friend are, through the goodness of God, with more or less of imperfection, often found among our fellows, but they are complete only in Him who is the fellow of the Almighty." —Arnot.

"The friendship of high and sanctified spirits loses nothing by death but its alloy; failings disappear, and the virtues of those whose 'faces we shall behold no more' appear greater and more sacred when beheld through the shades of the sepulchre." —Robert Hall.

a "Ignorance is mere privation, by which nothing can be produced; it is a vacuity in which the soul sits motionless and torpid for want of attraction. And, without knowing why, we always rejoice when we learn, and grieve when we forget."—Johnson.

b "Do nothing rashly. Stay a little, that you may make an end the sooner." —Lord Bacon.

abuse, as if he were the sufferer; while the poor man has humbly to ask pardon, as if he were in the wrong."—Pul. Com.

24. man, etc., the precise meaning of the original is not given in our version; R. V., "He that maketh many friends doeth it to his own destruction: But, etc." One who is a friend to everybody is of little worth to anybody, and receives but little benefit fr. his friends in the day of adversity wh. they help to inaugurate. there is a friend,[b] "yet there is another, and a real kind of friendship, the opposite of this; and it sometimes rises higher than that wh. even a brother ordinarily exhibits."—Stuart.

A Faithful Friend (vs. 24).—I. Christ is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. II. The reason why we may depend on Christ as being a faithful friend. 1. True friendship can only be between true men, whose hearts are the soul of honor; 2. Faithfulness to us in our faults is a certain sign of fidelity in a friend; 3. There are some things in His friendship which render us sure of not being deceived when we put our confidence in Him; 4. The friendship which will last does not take its rise in the chambers of mirth, nor is it fed and fattened there; 5. A friend who is acquired by folly is never a lasting friend, nor is the friendship of ignorance desirable; 7. Friendship and love to be real must lie not in words but in deeds; 8. A purchased friend will never last long; 9. There cannot by any possibility arise any cause which could make Christ love us less. III. An inference to be derived from this. 1. If Christ sticks close, then our enemies will stick close also; 2. Is Christ your friend?—C. H. Spurgeon.——Friendship.—Whoever employs many assistants in his affairs must in gratitude repay his service to as many when they need it; and as Briareus, who, with his hundred hands, was daily obliged for his bare subsistence to feed fifty stomachs, could thrive no better than ourselves, who supply a single one with two hands, so a man of many friends cannot boast any other privilege but that of being a slave to many, and of sharing in all the business cares and disquiet that may befall them.—Plutarch.

Friends.—

"The best friend is an atmosphere
Warm with all inspirations dear,
Wherein we breathe the large free breath
Of life that hath no taint of death.

Our friend is an unconscious part
Of every true beat of our heart;
A strength, a growth, whence we derive God's health, that keeps the world alive."

CHAPTER THE NINETEENTH.

1, 2. (1) poor, the word used means poor in circumstances. integrity, upright though humble. Character is ever of more value than any circumstances. perverse, etc., the proud rich man who haughtily and scornfully misuses his lips. fool, the intentional opposite of humble innocence. (2) without knowledge,[a] or "Even the soul (i. e. life itself) without knowledge is not a blessing."—Wordsworth. hasteth, etc., does things inconsiderately and with precipitation. Rashness is the result of ignorance.[b] sinneth, R. V. marg., "misseth his way." Stuart brings the two parts of the vs. into closer relations to each other by translating: "Moreover in the soul's lack of knowledge there is no good; and he who hasteneth with his feet, goeth astray;" haste indicating the lack of proper knowledge.

The Better Man (vs. 1).—I. He is a better man in himself. 1. He is a better character—contrast the principles, the worth of the two; 2. He has better enjoyments. II. He is a better man to others. 1. Relation; 2. Neighbor; 3. Citizen. Application:—A word to the pious poor; many things are better than wealth—intellect, knowledge, friendship, religion. —Thomas.——Divine Knowledge Most Desirable (vs. 2).—Without it a man has no—I. Directory for his ways. II. Remedy for his sins. III. Support in his troubles. IV. Strength for his duties. V. Hope in his end. Apply:—Learn—1. To pity those who are in ignorance of the truth of Christ; 2. Improve the means of grace; 3. Make a good use of the knowledge you possess.—Simeon.

3. foolishness, etc., inconsiderate wilfulness. perverteth, R. V., "subverteth," overturns. fretteth, or rageth. Blames God for his own failures.[a]

Blaming the Wrong Party (vs. 3).—I. By their folly men often pervert their own way through the world; by profligacy, intemperance, etc., they come to want. II. So reduced they often accuse Providence, or talk of ill-luck, etc. III. Men ought honestly to take the blame to themselves; that would be a step towards improving their lot.

Folly of Fretfulness.—Two gardeners, who were neighbors, had their crops of early peas killed by frost; one of them came to condole with the other on this misfortune. "Ah!" cried he, "how unfortunate we have been, neighbor! do you know I have done nothing but fret ever since. But you seem to have a fine healthy crop coming up already; what are these?" "These!" cried the other gardener, "why, these are what I sowed immediately after my loss." "What! coming up already?" cried the fretter. "Yes; while you were fretting, I was working." "What! don't you fret when you have a loss?" "Yes; but I always put it off until after I have repaired the mischief." "Why, then you have no need to fret at all." "True," replied the industrious gardener; "and that's the very reason."—Arvine.

4, 5. (4) Wealth, etc., see ch. xiv. 20. poor, here Heb. dal, the poor regarded as weak. separated, etc., bec. his neighbor is afraid lest he may want something of him; so he shuns intercourse with him.[b] (5) false witness, see ch. xvii. 5.[c] unpunished, Heb. "held innocent." not escape, appropriate judgment.

The Power of Money (vs. 4).—I. This is seen by its presence. It makes friends. 1. It is a question if such friends are worth the making, whose friendship depends on the balance at the banker's; 2. There is nothing said about the mode of getting the wealth, that is often a small matter so that one be rich. II. By its absence tends to separate the poor from their neighbors. 1. But what neighbors! 2. Yet there is some advantage in the fact stated; with this before them the poor are more likely to be industrious. Learn:—The folly and misery of making money the standard of respectability.

Pillaging the Poor.—The nets which we use against the poor are just those worldly embarrassments which either their ignorance or their improvidence are almost certain at some time or other to bring them into; then just at the time when we ought to hasten to help them, and teach them how to manage better in future, we rush forward to pillage them, and force all we can out of them in their adversity. For, to take one instance only, remember this is literally and simply what we do whenever we buy, or try to buy, cheap goods—goods offered at a price which we know cannot be remunerative for the labor involved in them. Whenever we buy such goods, we are stealing somebody's labor.—Ruskin.——A Legacy with a Moral.—A more extraordinary legacy than that bequeathed to his fellow-citizens by Father la Loque cannot well be imagined. At his death his body was found stretched on a miserable bed in an attic of the Quartier de Grenelle, which is anything but a fashionable district of Paris. He was an old man, had lived in the simplest way, sustaining himself almost entirely on bread. His room contained hardly any furniture, yet hid in a corner was found a little cupboard with numerous shelves, and on these were sorted with the greatest order regiments of corks. In the center was a manuscript written by the Père la Loque, on which he stated that he had formerly been in possession of considerable wealth, now squandered; that of all his greatness there remained but these corks, drawn in better times to welcome many a friend who now had forgotten him; that age and ruin had taught their moral, and that on each cork would be found written its history. This the old man did, hoping that it would serve as a timely warning, and that, placed on the shelves of some museum or of a phil-

"Things are not to be done by the effort of the moment, but by the preparation of past moments."—Cecil.

Is. xxvii. 11; Ho. iv. 6.

[a] Is. xlv. 9. "It is only a man who does not know God, who 'frets against the Lord.' Men wilfully ignorant that whenever God says 'Thou shalt not' He is only saying 'Do thyself no harm,' chafe and fret against His moral laws."—Preacher's Com.

[b] "Bec. men's consciences tell them they ought to relieve and succor such poor neighbors, they are willing to have the excuse that they did not see them."—Mat. Henry.

[c] "When Aristotle was asked what a man could gain by telling a falsehood, he replied, 'Never to be credited when he speaks the truth.'" — Dav. Thomas.

"The study of truth is perpetually joined with the love of virtue; for there is no virtue which derives not its original from truth, as, on the contrary, there is no vice which has not its beginning in a lie. Truth is the foundation of all knowledge, and the cement of all societies."—Casuerba.

"Why pull down thy barns and 'build greater?' Thou hast barns enough—the bosoms of the needy, the houses of widows, the mouths of orphans."—St. Ambrose.

"He is rich enough who owes nothing."—French Proverb.

"Help somebody worse off than yourself, and you will find you are better off than you fancied."

"It is right to be content with what we have, but never with what we are." —T. Mackintosh.

"Want is the scorn of every wealthy fool, and wit in rags is turn'd to ridicule." — Juvenal.

Wine and good dinners make abundance of friends; but in the time of adversity not one is to be found.

"A long life may be passed without finding a friend in whose understanding and virtue we can equally confide, and whose opinion we can value at once for its justness and sincerity." — Johnson.

He who cannot keep his own secret, is of all men the most unfit to be entrusted with the secrets of others.

"Let falsehood be a stranger to thy lips. Shame on the policy that first began to tamper with the heart, to hide its thoughts! And doubly shame on that inglorious tongue that sold its honesty and told a lie!"—Havard.

"It does not follow that we are not to be angry, but we are to remember that anger is all the nobler for being deferred and for being matured by the reasoning of conscience." — Parker.

[a] Plato said to his servant, "I would beat thee but that I am angry."

osopher's study, they might be found to illustrate human nature. On one of the corks was an inscription to this effect:—"Champagne cork; bottle emptied 12th of May, 1843, with M. B——, who wished to interest me in a business by which I was to make ten millions. This affair cost me 50,000 francs. M. B—— escaped to Belgium. A caution to amateurs." On another appears the following note:—"Cork of Cyprus wine, of a bottle emptied on the 4th of December, 1850, with a dozen fast friends. Of these I have not found a single one to help me on the day of my ruin."—Once a Week.

6, 7. (6) intreat, lit. "will stroke the face." prince, R. V., "the liberal man." giveth gifts, the generous-handed. (7) brethren .. hate, bec. of his troublesome dependence on them. friends, contrasted with brothers, as in ch. xviii. 24. with words, of entreaty. yet .. him, R. V., "but they are gone;" "he who earnestly seeks for the former words of friendship and kindness will now find them no more."—Umbreit.

Inhumanity.—"In giving an account of the state of the Sandwich Islands, as they were half a century ago, the missionaries stated, that the helpless and dependent, whether from age or sickness, were often cast from the habitations of their relatives and friends, to languish and die—unattended and unpitied. An instance recently came to their knowledge, in which a poor wretch thus perished, after having lain uncovered for days and nights in the open air, most of the time pleading in vain to his family, still within the hearing of his voice, for a drink of water. And when he was dead, his body, instead of being buried, was merely drawn so far into the bushes, as to prevent the offence that would have arisen from the corpse, and left a prey to the dogs who prowl through the district in the night."—Old Test. Anec.

8, 9. (8) wisdom, Heb. heart; implying the higher faculties of reason and feeling. loveth .. soul, by striving to obtain wisdom a man shows that he has regard for the welfare of his soul and body. Hence St. Thomas Aquinas takes occasion to demonstrate that only good men are really lovers of themselves, while evil men are practically self-haters." keepeth, which is often quite as difficult as the getting. (9) false witness, comp. vs. 5.

The Best Proof of the Highest Self-love (vs. 8).—I. Here is a character described: the man who loves his soul. 1. He remembers that he has a soul; 2. He seeks its cultivation as a thinking principle; 3. He seeks its salvation. II. Such a man will seek wisdom—1. As the proper food of the soul; 2. He will seek it earnestly, and at the right source; 3. He will seek for the wisdom that will make him wise to salvation.

A Norwegian Farmer.—More than thirty years ago, a Norwegian farmer was, at the age of thirty-five, in the habit of making excursions from his father's dwelling for the purpose of distributing religious tracts, which he had caused to be printed at his own expense, and which he sold or gave away. The effects of his labors were perfectly astonishing, not less than 50,000 peasants dating the period of their conversion to sound and vital Christianity at the time when they first became known to that remarkable individual. To the sufferings which he had undergone it is most distressing to advert; he endured eleven several imprisonments, one of which lasted for a period of ten years. There is a passage towards the close of his journal, dated in the year 1814, from which it appears that a fine of a thousand rix-dollars was imposed upon him, and that all which he possessed on earth was sold for the liquidation of that debt: he might have escaped it, could he have prevailed on himself to petition the king, saying that he was unable to pay the amount.

10, 11. (10) Delight, a soft delicate life; high unrestrained enjoyment; luxury. servant .. princes, ch. xxx. 22. This has often happened at the courts of Oriental despots, where some slave is raised by favoritism to a position superior to that of the princes of the realm. (11) discretion, or prudence; self-restraint,[a] ch. xiv. 29, xvi. 32. deferreth, R. V., "maketh him slow." pass over a transgression, in a spirit of merciful forgiveness.

Anger Appeased.—When Lanfranc was prior of Bec he ventured to oppose Duke William's Flemish marriage. In a wild burst of wrath William bade his men burn a manor-house of Bec and drive out Lanfranc from Norman ground. He came to see the work done, and found Lanfranc hobbling on a lame horse towards the frontier. He angrily bade him hasten, and Lanfranc replied by a cool promise to go faster out of his land if he would give him a better steed. "You are the first criminal that ever asked gifts from his judge," retorted William, but a burst of laughter told that the wrath had gone, and William and Lanfranc drew together again.—Green.

12. king's wrath,[a] inspires terror in a subject as the lion's roar terrifieth his prey, ch. xvi. 15, xx. 2, xxviii. 15. dew, ch. xvi. 15; Ps. lxxii. 6.

Dew in Palestine.—The secret of the luxuriant fertility of many parts of Palestine lies in the rich supply of moisture afforded by the sea-winds which blow inland each night, and water the face of the whole land. From May till October rain is unknown, the sun shining with unclouded brightness day after day. The heat becomes intense, the ground hard; and vegetation would perish but for the moist west winds that come each night from the sea. The bright skies cause the heat of the day to radiate very quickly into space, so that the nights are as cold as the day is the reverse. To this coldness of the night air the indispensable watering of all plant-life is due. The winds, loaded with moisture, are robbed of it as they pass over the land, the cold air condensing it into drops of water, which fall in a gracious rain of mist on every thirsty blade. In the morning the fog thus created rests like a sea over the plains, and far up the sides of the hills, which raise their heads above it like so many islands. The amount of moisture thus poured on the thirsty vegetation during the night is very great. Dew seemed to the Israelites a mysterious gift of heaven, as indeed it is. That the skies should be stayed from yielding it was a special sign of Divine wrath, and there could be no more gracious conception of a loving farewell address to his people than where Moses tells them that his speech should distil as the dew. The favor of an Oriental monarch could not be more beneficially conceived than by saying that, while his wrath is like the roaring of a lion, his favor is as the dew upon the grass.—Geikie.

13, 14. (13) foolish son, comp. ch. x. 1, xv. 20, xvii. 21, 25. calamity,[a] a plural word, intimating the variety of troubles a foolish son may cause. continual dropping, the irritating altercations and bickering of a cross-grained wife are compared to the continuous drip of water through an imperfectly constructed roof. The Scotch say, "A leaky house and a scolding wife are two bad companions." (14) House .. fathers, such things as these men gather and leave to their children; but the better gift of the prudent wife comes directly from God.[b] The blessing is more directly and manifestly His bestowment.

The Husband's Troubles.—The contentions of a wife. I. They are often about small things. II. There is no escape from them. III. They produce one of the greatest miseries of home life. IV. They drive the husband to seek peace elsewhere.

Self-control of Socrates.—His wife, Xantippe, was a woman of a most fantastical and furious spirit. At one time, having vented all the reproaches upon Socrates her fury could suggest, he went out and sat before the door. His calm and unconcerned behavior but irritated her so much the more; and, in the excess of her rage, she ran upstairs and emptied a vessel upon his head, at which he only laughed, and said, "that so much thunder must needs produce a shower." Alcibiades, his friend, talking with him about his wife, told him he wondered how he could bear such an everlasting scold in the same house with him; he replied, "I have so accustomed myself to expect it, that it now offends me no more than the noise of carriages in the streets."—Cheever.

15, 16. (15) Slothfulness, comp. ch. vi. 9, 10. deep sleep, state of utter indifference. idle soul, comp. ch. x. 4, xii. 24, xx. 13; "idleness is the tomb of a living man." (16) keepeth, etc., ch. x. 17, xiii. 13. despiseth his ways, R. V., "is careless of," and so treats his moral conduct as of no importance.[c]

Ability to Labor.—Where ability to labor is, there Providence meets action and crowns it. He that forbids to cark for to-morrow, denies bread to the idleness of to-day. Consider, O my soul, thy own delin-

It is said of Julius Caesar that, when provoked, he used to repeat the whole Roman alphabet before he suffered himself to speak.

[a] "Anger is like ashes, wh. fly back in the face of him who throws them."—Old Proverb.

"The favor of my friend is as the refreshing dew." "The favors of that good man are continually dropping upon us." "He bathes me with his favors."—Roberts.

"Procure not friends in haste, and when thou hast a friend part not with him in haste."—Solon.

"Unlimited power is too much for proud human nature to bear, except with special grace from above."—Bridges.

[a] Stroke upon stroke.

[b] Pr. xviii. 22.

"Happy is that country whose best life has been drained into some ideal cause, and whose greatest names are the names of those who have lavished their strength on this object. The deeds and sayings of these heroes ought, next to the Bible, to be the chief spiritual nourishment of her children; and the young ambition of her choicest minds should be concentrated on watering the seeds which they sowed."—James Stalker.

[c] Ps. cxix. 9.

"Our character is the final result of everything that we have ever done, both in mind and in the flesh. So that each gracious word we speak, each kindly service we render to any one in need, is one more stroke of the chisel which is carving a beautiful character, fair in the sight of God himself." —Pul. Com.

[a] Comp. Mat. xxv. 40.

"God is pleased with no music below so much as in the thanksgiving songs of relieved widows, of supported orphans, of rejoicing and comforted and thankful persons. This part of our communication does the work of God and our neighbors, and bears us to heaven in streams made by the overflowing of our brothers' comfort." —Jeremy Taylor.

"In all other human gifts and passions, though they advance nature, yet they are subject to excess. But charity alone admits no excess. For so we see, by aspiring to be like God in power, the angels transgressed and fell; by aspiring to be like God in knowledge man transgressed and fell; but by aspiring to be like God in goodness or love, neither man nor angel ever did, or shall transgress. For unto that imitation we are called." — Lord Bacon.

"For the soul that gives is the soul that lives;
And bearing another's load
Doth lighten your own and shorten the way,
And brighten the homeward road"
—Washington Gladden.

quency, and let employment make thee capable of thy God's protection. The bird that sits is a fair mark for the fowler; while they that use the wing escape the danger. Follow thy calling, and Heaven will follow thee with His blessing. What thou hast formerly omitted, present repentance may redeem; and what judgments God hath threatened, early petitions may avert.—Quarles.

17. pity .. poor, wh. may find expression in other ways than by giving moneys. lendeth, so that he may certainly look for return and payment:[a] though this must not be made the motive of his charity.

Lending to the Lord.—To the more imperfect this is what we may say, Give of what you have unto the needy. Increase your substance. For, saith he, "He that giveth unto the poor lendeth unto God." But if you are in a hurry, and wait not for the time of retribution, think of those who lend money to men; for not even these desire to get their interest immediately; but they are anxious that the principal should remain a good long while in the hands of the borrower, provided only the repayment be secure, and they have no mistrust of the borrower. Let this be done, then, in the present case also. Leave them with God, that He may pay thee thy wages manifold. Seek not to have the whole here; for if you recover it all here, how will you receive it back there? And it is on this account that God stores them up there, inasmuch as this present life is full of decay. But he gives even here also; for, "Seek ye," saith He, "the kingdom of heaven, and all these things shall be added unto you." Well, then, let us look towards that kingdom, and not be in a hurry for the repayment of the whole, lest we diminish our recompense. But let us wait for the fit season. For the interest in these cases is not of that kind, but is such as is meet to be given by God. This, then, having collected together in great abundance, so let us depart hence, that we may obtain both the present and the future blessings.—St. Chrysostom.——The Lord was Their Banker.—Mr. Philip Henry, one of the Nonconformist ministers, when silenced from preaching by the Act of Uniformity, took comfort himself, and administered comfort to others, from the passage, "Let Mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab." "God's people," he observed, "may be an outcast people—cast out of men's love, their synagogues, their country; but God will own his people when men cast them out; they are outcasts, but they are His, and some way or other He will provide a dwelling for them." Shortly before his death, the same pious man observed that, though many of the ejected ministers were brought very low, had many children, were greatly harassed by persecution, and their friends generally poor and unable to support them, yet, in all his acquaintance, he never knew nor could remember to have heard of any Nonconformist minister in prison for debt. —Arvine.——Charity Rewarded.—A poor man with an empty purse came one day to Michael Feneberg, the godly pastor of Seeg, in Bavaria, and begged three crowns, that he might finish his journey. It was all the money Feneberg had, but as he besought him so earnestly in the name of Jesus, in the name of Jesus he gave it. Immediately after he found himself in great outward need, and seeing no way of relief, he prayed, saying: "Lord, I lent Thee three crowns; Thou hast not yet returned them, and Thou knowest how I need them. Lord, I pray Thee, give them back." The same day a messenger brought a money-letter, which Gossner, his assistant, reached over to Feneberg, saying: "Here, father, is what you expended." The letter contained two hundred thalers, or about one hundred and fifty dollars, which the poor traveler had begged from a rich man for the Vicar; and the childlike old man, in joyful amazement, cried out: "Ah, dear Lord, one dare ask nothing of Thee, for straightway Thou makest one feel so much ashamed."—Old. Test. Anec.

18, 19. (18) Chasten, etc., ch. xiii. 24, xxxiii. 13. while, R. V., "seeing." spare .. crying, R. V., "set not thy heart on his destruction." It is a caution to passionate parents against angry resentments, and undue chastisements; "indulge not thy desire to slay him."—Stuart. (19) great wrath, who by unrestrained temper is led to do foolish and violent things. suffer punishment, R. V., "bear the penalty." do it again, "you cannot save him from the consequences of his ungoverned temper; you may do so once and again, but while his disposition is unchanged, all your efforts will be useless, and the help which you have given him will only make him think that he may continue to indulge his anger with impunity, or, it may be, he will vent his impatience on his deliverer."—Pul. Com.

Timely Chastisement.—"Prevention is better than cure." If we wait till the weeds run to seed it is in vain for us to pull them up—they will have sown another and larger crop. The lion's cub may be caught and caged; the full-grown beast is dangerous to approach, and out of our power. These truths: (1) Show us the importance of early home-training. The first seeds are sown at home. If an evil disposition reveals itself there, it should be checked before it develops into a fatal habit. Foolishly fond parents laugh at exhibitions of bad temper and other faults in very young children, amused at the quaintness and pitying the helplessness of these miniature sins. But surely a wiser course would be to nip the evil in the bud. (2) Enhance the value of Sunday School work. Five million children were under Sunday School teaching in England during the year 1888. The great mass of the population passes through this instruction. Surely more should be made of the golden opportunity thus afforded of giving a right course to the lives of the people. Most working men will not go to church. But they will permit their children to attend Sunday School. We have the working classes with us in their childhood. (3) Point to an enlargement of the agency of industrial schools. Already juvenile crime has been reduced by one-half—this is one of the most cheering signs of the times. But still there are multitudes of children who breathe an atmosphere of crime from their cradles. There is no more Christian work than the effort to save these victims of the vices of their parents. The juvenile offender should be an object of peculiar solicitude to one who has the well-being of society at heart.—Pul. Com.

20—22. (20) Hear counsel, such as a father gives, who wisely corrects and chastises. latter end, as addressed to youth this refers to the later and responsible time of life. (21) many devices, plans and schemes. The purposes of many are very various, and ever changing. counsel . . stand, it is well for us that a Divine overruling should arrange and modify our plans. (22) desire, or wish. is his kindness, R. V., "is the measure of his kindness." His desire may be taken into gracious account, though he may be unable to carry it into act. We say to-day: "One must take the will for the deed." liar, prob. the rich man who makes excuses for not giving. "A poor man who gives to one in distress his sympathy and good wishes, even if he can afford no substantial aid, is better than a rich man who promises much and does nothing, or who falsely professes that he is unable to help."

Devices (vs. 21).—I. The devices of men's hearts. The heart a world, full of schemes, always devising. What a scene if they could all be brought to light! II. The vanity of them. What a world if they could be all fulfilled! III. The counsel of the Lord frustrating, controlling, overruling these devices. Learn—1. How vain are the attempts to oppose the counsel of God; 2. How foolish the idea that as knowledge comes into the world religion will go out; 3. How easy for God to overturn all wicked devices; 4. What a revelation will there be, at the last day, of devices.—Penny Pulpit.

Man Proposes, but God Disposes.—This is a fact of national and individual history. In both inspired and uninspired records we meet with abundant confirmations of this truth. There is no more striking illustration of it than in the life of Joseph. He leaves his father's house, as he supposes, for a few days, little dreaming that he is traversing a path by which he will never return. He only purposes to find his brethren, and "see if it is well with them, and bring his father word again." But God is then directing his steps into a far-off land—into slavery, to a prison, and through both to a throne. So the shepherd boy of Bethlehem sets out with the unambitious intention of carrying supplies to his brethren, and of seeing how the battle is likely to go, and becomes himself the central figure in the camp, and the hero of his nation. And David's predecessor goes in search of his father's asses, and finds a crown and a kingdom at the end of his journey. Cromwell, despairing of enjoying liberty in England, planned to make a home in America, and, it "Indulge not thy desire to slay him."—Stuart.

"When the rod is used, the end in view should be, purely and exclusively, the benefit of the child; not the gratification of any resentful passion on the part of the parent." — Wardlaw.

"Truth, the mother of Virtue, is painted in garments as white as snow. Her looks are serene, pleasant, courteous, cheerful, and yet modest; she is the light and joy of human society. She is commonly accounted the daughter of Time, because Truth is discovered in the course of time; but Democritus feigns that she lies hid in the bottom of a well." —Andrew Tooke.

"From the Bible first engrave on your hearts, then translate in your lives, and last emblazon aloft on the pediment of your trade temple this short and simple legend: 'A poor man is better than a liar.' "—Preacher's Com.

"Lying is a disgraceful vice, and one that Plutarch paints in most disgraceful colors, when he says that it is 'affording testimony that one first despises God, and then fears men.' It is not possible more happily to describe its horrible, disgusting, and abandoned nature; for can we imagine anything more vile than to be cowards with regard to men, and brave with regard to God?"—Montaigne.

is said, actually went on board a vessel which was about to sail. But God, using as an instrument the man to whose throne he was to succeed, directed his steps in another direction, and being forbidden to quit the country, he becomes not only England's deliverer, but a great and powerful ruler, whose influence was felt throughout Europe. Clive went out to India as a clerk, because he had no prospects of getting a living at home, and lays the foundation of our Indian empire. And there is hardly a man living who, if he reflects upon his past life, cannot remember passages in his own history which confirm the truth of the text. He makes certain plans, and purposes to accomplish certain designs, and the result of his doings is quite different from his intentions, or leads him to a place, or a position, or into relationships which were entirely out of his calculation when he "devised his way."—Hom. Com

23, 24. (23) fear, etc., Jehovah gives life to those who reverence Him. abide, better read clause, "He that is filled with it (the fear of the Lord) shall pass the night, and not be visited with evil." (24) hideth his hand, R. V., "burieth his hand in the dish," reference is to the dish into wh. each person put his hand. The man is so lazy he will not raise his hand to feed himself.[a] Comp. ch. xxvi. 15.

Godly Fear.—The fear peculiar to a Christian is not of that nature which is servile and tends to despair. It is not that of a slave, but of a son. They who are influenced by too great a degree of fear, may at last become subject to such despondency as to give up all hope, and relax in their diligence in the use of all the means. When Dionysius, the tyrant, says Bp. Taylor, imposed intolerable tributes upon his Sicilian subjects, it amazed them and they petitioned and cried for help, and flattered him, and feared, and obeyed him carefully; but he imposed still new ones, and greater, and at last left them poor as the valley of Vesuvius, or the top of Aetna; but then all being gone, the people grew idle and careless, and walked in the markets and public places, cursing the tyrant, and bitterly scoffing his person and vices; which when Dionysius heard, he caused the publicans and committees to withdraw their impost; "for now," says he, "they are dangerous, because they are desperate." When men have nothing, says the same author, they will despise their rulers. So it is in religion. If our fears be unreasonable our diligence is none at all, and from whom we hope for nothing, neither benefit nor indemnity, we despise his command, and break his yoke, and trample it under our most miserable feet. Let our confidence be allayed with fear, and our fear be sharpened with the intertextures of a holy hope, and the active powers of our souls will be furnished with feet and wings, with eyes and hands, with consideration and diligence, with reason and encouragement. But despair is part of the punishment that is in hell, and the devils still do evil things, because they never hope to receive a good nor find a pardon.—Buck.

25. Smite, give corporal punishment to. scorner, ch. xiii. 1. Such a man is regarded as irreclaimable. "It is a character made up of pride, irreverence, and cruelty." simple, conceived as ready to learn. will beware, R. V., "will learn prudence." reprove, etc., if there be any right disposition reproof becomes valuable moral discipline.[b]

Infidelity.—"There is one thing," said Mr. S., a professed infidel, to one of his companions in sin, "which mars all the pleasures of my life." "Ah," replied his companion, "what is that?" "Why, I am afraid the Bible is true. If I could but certainly know that death is an eternal sleep, I should be happy: my joy would be complete. But here is the thorn that stings me! This is the sword that pierces my very soul. If the Bible be true, I am lost for ever. Every prospect is gone, and I am lost for ever!" This unhappy man soon afterwards undertook a voyage, was shipwrecked, and drowned.—R. T. S.

26, 27. (26) wasteth, wasting his property by riotous living; and his spirit by unfilial conduct.[c] chaseth away, "by his shameless and evil life makes it impossible for her to continue under the same roof with him; or, it may be, so dissipates his parents' means that they are driven from their home." (27) Cease, etc., good warning for Rehoboam, and all sons in like peril.

Examples of prodigality.—Lucullus, the Roman general, though just[a] "The scene brought before us is that of an Eastern feast. There are no knives, forks, or spoons. Every guest has to help himself or be helped by the host." — Spk. Com.

"A favorite illustration among the Arabs of extreme idleness is the man that would not turn his head over on his pillow, though the muddy water leaking through the roof fell plump into his eye."—Thomson.

"Whatever the love of God has induced Him graciously to promise, no power or combination of powers in existence can stay from being done." — Wardlaw.

[b] "Therefore God smites some that He may warn all."—Bp. Hall. "His brain is as dry as the remainder - biscuit after a voyage." —Shakespeare. "It is a sign that folly is deeply ingrained when an hundred rods leave men as great fools as they found them."—Lawson.

[c] De. xxi. 18, 21; Pr. xvii. 21 —25, xx. 20. "We never find the Scripture commending any prodigal but one, and him, too, only for his ceasing to be so. Whose courses, ly admired for his bravery, justice, and clemency, yet is deservedly censured for his extravagance and prodigality. Cicero and Pompey, meeting him one day in the city, told him they intended doing themselves the pleasure of supping with him that night; "but it shall be upon this condition," added they, "that you have nothing extraordinary on our account." To this he seemingly agreed; but guess their surprise, when they sat down to an entertainment that cost no less than fifty thousand crowns! What astonished them more was the shortness of the time in which it was prepared; but this it seems was little more than his ordinary diet. This superfluous pomp and magnificence will not be thought incredible if we compare it with that of Peter du Ruere after he was made cardinal by the pope, his kinsman; for in the space of two years which he lived at Rome he expended in feasts and entertainments no less than four hundred thousand crowns. Muleasses, King of Thunes, was so complete an epicure that, being expelled from his kingdom for his infamous debaucheries, and hearing afterwards that Charles V. was inclined to reinstate him on the throne, he ordered a peacock to be dressed for his supper, and spent a hundred crowns on the sauce. The Emperor Vitellius was likewise so shamefully fond of superfluity and excess, that for one single meal he has ordered two thousand different kinds of fish, and seven thousand fowls. Without doubt these epicures agreed with the poet Philoxenus, who wished that he had a crane's neck, that he might the longer enjoy the pleasure of eating and drinking.—Stretch.

28, 29. (28) ungodly witness, Heb. a witness of Belial. One who is false by bad principles. scorneth,[a] R. V., "mocketh," by boldly uttering his lies. iniquity, better, mischief. It is a real enjoyment to him to produce calamity. He swallows it as if it were sweet fruit. As a dainty, he seizes it and lives on it. (29) prepared, and therefore sure to come eventually upon such. Their punishment is sure, fixed, and ready.

Voltaire.—Voltaire spent his whole life in malignant but vain attempts to ridicule and overturn Christianity. He was the idol of a large portion of the French nation; but just when they were decreeing new honors for him, and loading him with applause, the hour of his ignominy and shame arrived. In a moment, the approach of death dissipated his delusive dreams and filled his soul with inexpressible horror. Conscience started from her long slumbers, and unfolded before him the extended roll of his crimes. Whither could he flee for relief? Fury and despair succeeded each other by turns, and he had more the appearance of a demon than a man. To his physician he said, "Doctor, I will give you half of what I am worth if you will give me six months' life." The doctor answered, "Sir, you cannot live six weeks." Voltaire replied, "Then I shall go to hell, and you shall go with me;" and soon after expired.—R. T. S.

If we reflect upon, we shall see his prodigality bringing him from his revelling companions and his riotous meats, to the swine and to the trough; and from imitating their sensuality, by a natural consequence to take up with their diet too." — South.

"Cease to hear instruction,If you are going to err afterwards."

"Pursue knowledge that you may have both hands filled with instruments which will enable you to do a great and useful work in society."—Parker.

[a] Scorners are fools. Those that ridicule things sacred and serious do but make themselves ridiculous.

"If the wicked flourish, and thou suffer be not discouraged; they are fatted for destruction, thou art dieted for health." — Fuller.

CHAPTER THE TWENTIETH.

1. Wine,[b] personified here, represented as a sort of evil demon, wh. excites to frivolous wantonness, or to wild and boisterous action. It is evident fr. this that some Scripture wine was intoxicating. mocker, or scorner. That is, it is apt to make men such. strong drink, poss. palm wine of Syria; spiced wine;[c] or spirit taken from mead. raging, R. V., "a brawler," makes the man boisterous.[d] deceived, R. V. marg., "reeleth." not wise, for "it injures the health, enfeebles the intellect, deadens the moral sensibilities, destroys reputation, impoverishes the exchequer, disturbs friendship, breeds quarrels, and brings misery." "More are drowned in the wine-cup than in the ocean."—Germ. prov.

Lying Devices of Strong Drink.—Strong drink deceives the nation, by the vast amount of revenue that it pours into the public treasury. Drink generates pauperism, and pauperism is costly. Drink generates crime, and crime is costly. . . . There is a huge living creature with as many limbs as a Hindoo idol, and these limbs intertwined with each other in equally admirable confusion. The creature having life must be fed, and being large, must have a good deal of food for its sustenance. One day, having got rather short allowance, it was rolling its heavy head among its many limbs, and found something warm and fleshy. Being

[b] "Alcoholic drink is the great false prophet of England, — a prophet, working busily in every district, under the inspiration of hell."—David Thomas.

[c] Is. v. 11, 22.

[d] "When the wine is in the wit is out, and then the man, according as his natural temper is, either mocks like a fool, or rages like a madman."—Mat. Henry.

Pr. xxiii. 29, 30; Ho. iv. 11; Lu. xxi. 34; Eph. v. 18.

hungry, it made an incision with its teeth, laid its lips to the spot, and sucked. Warm blood came freely; the creature sucked its fill, and, gorged, lay down to sleep. Next day, it supplemented its short rations in the same way. Every day the creature drank from that opening, and as this rich draught made up about one-third of its whole sustenance, the wonder grew, why it was becoming weaker under the process, day by day. Some one at last bethought him of turning over the animal's intermingled limbs, and found that all this time it had been sucking its own blood! The discoverer proposed to bandage the spot, and not permit the continuance of the unnatural operation. The financiers cried out, "A third of the animal's sustenance comes from that opening; if you stop it, he will die!" Behold the wise politicians who imagine that the body politic would die of inanition, if it were deprived of the revenue which it sucks from its own veins, in the shape of taxes on the consumption of intoxicating drinks!—Arnot.

"Drinking is after all only a pronounced symptom of a large vice—self-indulgence; and self-indulgence is always fatal in the long run to all the habits and activities which men properly honor."—R. F. Horton.

"There is no trouble about guidance, if only we want to be guided. The trouble lies here,—that we want to lead, not to be guided. Thus we fall into the ditch and possibly lead some one else there also. God has made abundant provision for our guidance in the smallest matters, if only we will avail ourselves of it."—A. F. Schauffler.

"Temperance keeps the senses clear and unembarrassed, and makes them seize the object with more keenness and satisfaction. It gives you the command of your head, and preserves you in a condition for business." —Jeremy Collier.

The Two Workers.—

Two workers in one field
Toiled on from day to day;
Both had the same hard labor,
Both had the same small pay,
With the same blue sky above,
The same green grass below;
One soul was full of love,
The other full of woe.

One leaped up with the light,
With the soaring of the lark;
One felt it ever night,
For his soul was ever dark.
One heart was hard as stone,
One heart was ever gay;
One worked with many a groan,
One whistled all the day.

One had a flower-clad cot
Beside a merry mill;
Wife and children near the spot
Made it sweeter, fairer still.
One a wretched hovel had,
Full of discord, dirt, and din;
No wonder he seemed mad,
Wife and children starved within.

Still they worked in the same field,
Toiled on from day to day;
Both had the same hard labor,
Both had the same small pay.
But they worked not with one will;
The reason let me tell:
Lo! the one drank at the still,
And the other at the well.

[a] "Sol.'s object in this counsel is to deter his son fr. incurring his royal displeasure by libertinism and intemperance." —Wordsworth.

[b] Ha. ii. 10.

"The busybody's estate is too narrow for his mind, and therefore he is fain to make himself room in others' affairs; yet ever in pretence of love..... His tongue, like the tail of Samson's foxes, carries firebrands, and is enough to set the whole field of the world on a flame." — Bp. Hall.

2, 3. (2) fear, etc.,[a] R. V., "terror," ch. xix. 12. sinneth .. soul,[b] R. V., "life," by bringing down his wrath upon him; the Eastern king had full control over property and life. (3) cease from strife, R. V., "keep aloof from;" intimating a peaceful and peaceable habit of life. meddling, lit. rolls, or rushes forward (ch. xvii. 14); interfering in everybody's quarrel. "An officious interference with the business of others, a prying into their concerns, creates discord."

The Honor of Peace.—The old world looked for glory in war; the Christian ideal—anticipated in Old Testament teaching—is to recognize honor in peace. I. The honor of peace may be seen in self-repression. II. The honor of peace may be recognized in magnanimity. III. The honor of peace may be observed in charity. IV. The honor of peace may be recognized in humility.—Pul. Com.

Longsuffering Abused.—In an age of despotism, an Italian prince became celebrated for his forbearance, also for his severe punishment when aroused to do vengeance. He had an offending servant, who was repeatedly admonished. With every pardon, he became more reckless and impudent, and thought he could do anything with impunity. One day he entered the presence of the prince with his hat on, and, when rebuked, said he had a cold. His much enduring master said, "I will take care that you never catch a cold again." He immediately ordered the man to prison, and that the executioner should nail his hat to his head. One of the prince's friends expressed surprise at this severe sentence, because the servant had been pardoned for more serious crimes. The prince took a goblet, and having half-filled it with water, requested his friend to put an apple into it. This made the water rise to the brim. The prince then told his friend to drop in a coin. This made the water run over. "How is it," the prince asked, "that the small coin caused the water to run over, whereas the large apple only filled it to the brim?" The overflowing of the cup of God's mercy is wrath and destruction to the impenitent. —Foster's Cycl. of Ill.

4. sluggard,[a] ch. x. 4, one utterly indisposed to work, ready to find any excuse. cold, R. V., "winter," ploughing in Palestine is in Nov. and Dec., when the wind blows commonly from the north. Such a time is too rough and disagreeable for him, so he lets the opportunity pass.[b] beg, or desire; look for his share in the harvest-time.

Laborious Idleness.—There is such a thing as laborious idleness. Busy? So was the shepherd on the Alps, mentioned by Dugald Stewart, who spent fifteen years of life learning to balance a pole on his chin; and the philosopher sagely remarks how much good, had they been directed to a noble object, this diligence and perseverance would have accomplished. Busy? So have I seen the miller's wheel, which went round and round; but idly, grinding no corn. Busy? So, in a way, was the Russian who, facing the winter's cold nor regarding the cost of massive slabs brought at great labor from frozen lake or river, built him an icy palace, within whose glittering translucent walls, wrapt in furs and shining in jewels, rank and beauty held their revelry, and the bowl and the laugh and the song went round. But with soft breath, and other music, and opening buds, spring returned; and then, before the eyes that had gazed with wonder on the crystal walls of that fairy palace as they gleamed by night with a thousand lights, or flashed with the radiance of gems in the bright sunshine, it dissolved, nor left "a wrack behind"—its pleasures, "vanity;" its expense, "vexation of spirit." With an eye that pities because it foresees our miserable doom, God calls us from such busy trifling, from a life of laborious idleness to a service which is as pleasant as it is profitable, as graceful as it is dutiful, saying, Work out your salvation—"Work while it is called to-day, seeing that the night cometh when no man can work."—Guthrie.

5, 6. (5) Counsel, i. e. a man's secret purposes. in the heart, a purpose cherished, but unuttered.[c] The fig. is of deep well. draw it out, by his skill in questioning and leading on; draws as one draws water with a bucket, laboriously, from a deep place. (6) proclaim . . goodness, being always ready to talk about themselves: to "blow their own trumpets." The goodness here is bounty, liberality. faithful man,[a] the faithfulness intended is fidelity to promises, the practical execution of the vaunted benevolence.

Egotism.—There was a young Grecian poet who was so much praised by the people, that he became exceedingly vain, and thought himself superior to Hesoid, and other masters of song. He visited Plato, and began to praise his own performances, when the philosopher addressed him: "Tamyris, the graceful poet of Thrace, came to King Eurytus, who rewarded him magnificently for his songs, and honored him as the favorite of the Muses. This spoiled him; and he boasted that he would gain the victory if the Muses themselves were his rivals. The Muses chastised his presumption, smote him with blindness, and took away his gift of song. He destroyed himself; his arrogance induced his blindness and punishment. The Muses made the soul of Tamyris enter into a nightingale. Her form is the simplest and least beautiful: she

"As we see one coal kindle another, and wood to be apt matter to make a fire; so those that are disposed to contention and brawling are apt to kindle strife." —Cawdray.

[a] Pr. vi. 6.

[b] "Our farmers do actually plough in the severest weather. I have often seen them shivering with cold, and contending with wind and rain, quite enough to discourage those who are not sluggards. This hard necessity of winter work is mainly owing to the wretched implements used, and to a strange deficiency in agricultural science and skill. These men, with their frail ploughs and tiny oxen, must wait until the ground is saturated and softened, however late in the season that may be."—Thomson.

[c] "Some are very able and fit to give counsel, have an excellent faculty of cleaving a hair, hitting the joint of a difficulty, and advising pertinently; but they are modest and reserved, and not communicative; they have a great deal in them, but it is loth to come out." — Mat. Henry.

Mat. vi. 2, 5, 16; Lu. xvi. 15.

[a] "Men boast of their liberality, and we look in vain for the fulfilment of actual obligations." — Spk. Com.

"After the remarkable campaign in which Xerxes was driven and frightened out of Greece by Themistocles, the Grecian officers undertook to decide by vote who had done the best service. Every ballot bore first the name of the voter, and second the name of Themistocles."— Foster's Cycl.

hides herself in the dark grove, and loves best to pour forth her song in the silence of night. She knows not that the soul of a Tamyris dwells in her gentle bosom." The youth, filled with anger, left the philosopher, and his name is not now known among the bards of Hellas.—Foster's Cycl. of Ill.——Humility.—Wise men know their own ignorance, and are ever ready to learn. Humility is the child of knowledge. Michael Angelo was found by the Cardinal Farnese walking in solitude amid the ruins of the Coliseum, and when he expressed his surprise the great artist answered, "I go yet to school that I may continue to learn." Who among us can after this talk of finishing our education? We have need to learn of all around us. He must be very foolish who cannot tell us something; or more likely we must be more foolish not to be able to learn of him.—Spurgeon.

7, 8. (7) just man, one who is true before God, and upright in all dealings with his fellow-men. walketh, usual fig. for conducteth his life. children are blessed,[b] by his inspiring influence and example, and by the Divine favor. (8) king, etc., comp. ch. xiv. 35, xvi. 10, 15. scattereth, R. V. "winnoweth" it away as easily as chaff from the threshing-floor. with his eyes, the sinful man's conscience cannot stand before the penetrating gaze of the righteous judge.

Henry V. and the Judge.—One of the favorites of King Henry V., when Prince of Wales, having been indicted for some misdemeanor, was condemned, notwithstanding all the interest he could make in his favor; and the Prince was so incensed at the issue of the trial that he struck the judge on the bench. This magistrate, whose name was Sir William Gascoign, acted with a spirit becoming his character. He instantly ordered the Prince to be committed to prison; and young Henry, sensible by this time of the insult he had offered to the laws of his country, suffered himself to be quietly conducted to jail by the officers of justice. The king, Henry IV., who was an excellent judge of mankind, was no sooner informed of this transaction, than he cried out in a transport of joy, "Happy is the king who has a magistrate possessed of courage to execute the laws; and still more happy in having a son who will submit to such chastisement."—Cheever.

9, 10. (9) I have made, by my own endeavors. The question as asked here implies a negative answer. heart clean, attained to moral perfection.[c] pure, "perfectly free fr. sinful propensities," comp. Jer. ii. 22. (10) Divers weights, Heb. "an ephah and an ephah; a stone and a stone." "Deception in business is a peculiar and prominent form of that universal sinfulness which has just been spoken of as having no exceptions."—Zöckler. Comp. ch. xi. 1, xvi. 11.

No Absolute Perfection in this World (vs. 9).—I. The truth that is here intimated is clear—1. From express declarations of Holy Writ; 2. From such instances as are undeniable; 3. From the confessions of God's most eminent saints. II. The improvement we should make of it. It should call forth—1. Our humiliation; 2. Our watchfulness; 3. Our gratitude; 4. Our love to Christ.—Simeon.

Divers Weights.—Here we have a true view of the way in which nearly all traveling merchants deal with their customers. See that Mohammedan pedlar with his bags over his shoulder: the one contains his merchandise, the other his deceitful weights. He comes to your door, throws his bags on the ground, and is willing either to buy or to sell. Have you any old silver, gold, jewels, precious stones, iron, or lead, he is ready to be your customer; but he only buys with his own weights, which are much heavier than the standard. Should, you, however, require to purchase any articles, then he has other weights by which he sells; and you may often see him fumbling for a considerable time in the bag before he can find those which are less in weight than the regular standard.—Roberts.

11. by his doings, owing to the simplicity and straightforwardness of a child his actions reveal his char. pure, or clean.[a]

Honesty in a Child.—In a country school a large class were standing to spell. In the lesson there was a very hard word. I put the word to the scholar at the head, and he missed it; I passed it to the next, and the next, and so on through the whole class, till it came to the last scholar—the smallest of the class—and he spelled it right; at least, I understood b Pr. xiv. 26.

"God gives manhood but one clue to success—utter and exact justice; that He guarantees shall be always expediency." —Wendell Phillips.

"Beware of falling into the performance of any religious duty simply to be well spoken of by men."

"When I have been most careful in doing God's work, God has been the most faithful in doing mine."—Philip Henry.

c "Dr. Livingstone once asked a Bechuana what he understood by the word 'holiness.' He answered, 'When copious showers have descended during the night, and all the earth, and leaves, and cattle are washed clean, and the sun rising shows a drop of dew on every blade of grass, and the air breathes fresh—that is holiness.'" —Dav. Thomas.

Job viii. 6, xi. 4, xvi. 17, xxxiii. 9.

"It is time men had done talking about goodness. One action is better than a thousand theories."

a "'The child is the father of the man,' and the earliest actions are prophecies of the future, whether it will be pure and right, or unclean and evil."—Spk. Com.

him so, and he went to the head, above seventeen boys and girls, all older than himself. I then turned round and wrote the word on the blackboard, so that they might all see how it was spelled, and learn it better. But no sooner had I written it than the little boy at the head cried out, "Oh, I didn't say it so, Miss W——; I said e instead of i;" and he went back to the foot, of his own accord, quicker than he had gone to the head.—Fam. Treasury.

12, 13. (12) Lord hath made, and so will surely take account of how both are used. "He that planted the ear, shall he not hear? He that formed the eye, shall he not see?" Ps. xciv. 9. (13) sleep, that of the slothful. Comp. ch. xii. 11, xix. 15. open thine eyes, intimating that the resistance of slothfulness is a moral duty. Be wide awake, this is a secret of prosperity.

The Ear and the Eye (vs. 12).—Two practical conclusions. I. That God should be studied in these organs. 1. In them the Divine wisdom is manifest; 2. And also the Divine goodness; 3. The Divine wisdom is symbolized. II. That God should be served in these organs. 1. Translate the sensations they convey to us into Divine ideas; 2. Apply the Divine ideas to the formation of our characters.—Thomas.

14—16. (14) naught, etc., comp. Ge. xxiii. 15. It is the custom of Eastern traders to chaffer much over their prices. The buyer will complain in order to get goods cheaper. boasteth, of the article which, by undervaluing, he secured so cheap. The Scotch say: "He that disparages my mare would buy my mare."[a] (15) precious jewel, lit. a vessel of preciousness: or most precious of all: comp. ch. iii. 14—16. "We are reminded of our Lord's parable of the merchant seeking goodly pearls, and bartering all his wealth to gain possession of a worthy jewel (Matt. xiii. 45, etc.)." (16) Take his garment, this represents the order of the judge.[b] Ch. xxii. 27. strange woman,[c] better as R. V. "hold him in pledge that is surety for strangers." Sentiment, "Take the utmost precaution to secure a debt against a man, who becomes sponsor for everybody and anybody."—Stuart. Ch. xxvii. 13.

Bargaining.—This proverb refers—I. To a world-wide manifestation of human selfishness. A custom that was prevalent in the days of Solomon, many centuries ago, and amid circumstances which differed widely from those by which we are surrounded, has held its place among men until the present day, and will doubtless continue to do so until the teachings and the spirit of Christianity rule the world. It prevails in modern England quite as extensively as it did in ancient Judea; and whether the buyer be a millionaire bargaining for an estate, or a costermonger for the worth of a shilling, he is often found knowingly, and therefore criminally, depreciating the value of the commodity. It is a trait of fallen humanity which "makes the whole world kin." II. A pitiful ground of boasting. Although it does need some skill and experience to tell the real value of an article, it requires none to pronounce it good for nothing. Only a man with some knowledge and judgment can put a fair price upon it, but any fool can say, "It is naught, it is naught." And if by knowingly depreciating the purchase the buyer robs the seller, he has but a very poor transaction to boast of. He has wronged another, it is true, but he has far more grievously wronged himself, for if his neighbor is the poorer by a few pence or pounds, he is the poorer by so much injury done to his own conscience, and by so much loss of the confidence of his fellow men. He who makes a boast of such a matter must, indeed, have few grounds for boasting.—Hom. Com.

17—19. (17) Bread of deceit, secured by means of trickery. mouth .. gravel, Heb. and Arab. phrase for getting into trouble. Sand or gravel in the mouth is peculiarly unpleasant. (18) by counsel, ch. xv. 22, even the wisest of men needs friends' counsel. good .. war, Lu. xiv. 31, R. V., "by wise guidance make thou war." "War is a necessary evil, but must be undertaken prudently if at all." The word for advice is lit. pilotings; and is interesting as a maritime metaphor. (19) talebearer, ch. xi. 13. flattereth, R. V., "opens wide," talks too freely, so is pretty sure to do mischief.[a]

The dishonest man will find that, after all, his gains are not bread for his higher nature—that his soul is still unsatisfied, and crying out for "Every look, every movement, every expression, does something towards forming the character of the little heir to immortal life." —Mrs. Child.

"He who made our faculties exercises them himself on an infinite scale."

"If we could once realise the idea that God hears every word we utter and every breath we draw, the whole spirit of our life would instantly change." —Parker.

a "The vs. censures the well-known craft, the deceitful misrepresentation, with which business men seek to buy their wares as cheap as possible, below their value if they can." —O. Zockler.

b "Distrain upon him, even to his garment, bec. he is surety for a stranger, and may soon be reduced to beggary, and then thou wilt not be able to recover anything of him." — Wordsworth.

c "Strange women have strange ways of impoverishing men to enrich themselves." — Mat. Henry.

"Among the Romans, though a man were never so strong, never so valiant, yet, if he wanted wisdom and counsel, he was said to be miles sine oculis, a soldier without his eyes."—Jermin.

a "Those who love to tell news will hardly keep secrets." —Fausset.

"To hear an open slander is a curse: but not to find an answer is a worse."—Ovid.

"Have nothing to do with wordy men, would seem to be the injunction of the text. Society could not live if it were not for the sacred principle of secrecy, which may be called honor or confidence or trustworthiness." —Exp. B.

sustenance—and, more than this, that his conscience demands satisfaction for the wrong-doing of the past—that even if he is permitted to keep possession of his ill-gotten wealth, it is not only what chaff without the grain, or the husk without the kernel, is to the starving man, but as the very sand of the desert or the dust of the highway in the mouth, tormenting as well as unsatisfying.—Hom. Com.——Talebearing.—The carrying of a tale, and reporting what such a one said or such a one did, is the way to sow such grudges, to kindle such heart-burnings between persons, as oftentimes break forth and flame to the consumption of families, courts, and perhaps at length of cities and kingdoms. The mischief such incendiaries do is incredible, as being indeed for the most part inevitable. And a vine or a rose tree may as well flourish when there is a secret worm lurking and gnawing at the root of them, as the peace of those societies thrive that have such concealed plagues wrapped up in their hearts and bowels.—South.

20, 21. (20) curseth, etc., Ex. xxi. 17; Le. xx. 9; Mat. xv. 4. lamp, or candle; fig. of life. Ch. xiii. 9. obscure darkness,[a] R. V., "blackest darkness." "He shall be wrapped in the darkness of poverty, disappointment, and remorse." (21) may be, these words are better left out. gotten hastily, greedily sought after by unjust means.[b] not be blessed, God only blesses that wh. is righteous and good.

[a] Pr. vii. 9.

[b] "He points to the man who, with a voracious greed for wealth, seizes every opportunity to attain it, regardless of truth, honor, and justice, and thus becomes rich in a short time. But he is not blessed. Discovery comes and clothes him with infamy, conscience is roused and torments him. The curses of the defrauded and the frowns of the Almighty are over him."—Dav. Thomas.

"God only looks to pure and not to full hands."—Labertius.

Smitten Sins.—I. Hatred to parents. 1. It is unnatural beyond most vices, like hating the hand that lifts food to the mouth. 2. It is disobedience to a primary Divine command. 3. It incurs the Divine curse and the darkest doom. II. The vice of grasping. It springs from excessive, irregular, disordered desire, and generally from an ill-led life. We must wait upon God's order; must distinguish the necessary from the superfluous and the luxurious, and seek no enterprises that lie out of our proper vocation, if we would arm ourselves against this unholy temptation, and avoid the curse which attends compliance with it. For ill-gotten wealth can never prosper. III. The revengeful spirit. It costs more to avenge injuries than to endure them. "He that studieth revenge keepeth his wounds open." Let us recall the lessons of the sermon on the mount, and if there is any one who has aroused our dislike, pray for him (not in public, but in the privacy of the heart). IV. Injustice, whether in commerce or in general relations. What is shameful when detected is no less hideous in the sight of God, though concealed from men.—Johnson.

22, 25. (22) I will recompense,[c] see Ro. xii. 17—19.[d] save thee, from the evil. (23) Divers weights, vs. 10. (24) Man's goings,[e] lit. stately steppings of a strong man. Prob. here, the issues, the places where a man goes to. understand .. way, Heb. "a weak man" as comp. with the "mighty man" of the first clause. How is he to fathom his course in life so as to take it into his own management. (25) who devoureth, etc., R. V., "rashly to say, It is holy," i. e. to use the formula, for consecrating something to holy purposes. and after, after he has made his vow to begin to consider whether he can fulfill it or not, as did Herod and Saul the king.

[c] "He that studieth revenge keepeth His wounds open."—Lord Bacon.

[d] De. xxxii. 35; Pr. xxiv. 29; 1 Pe. iii. 9.

[e] Jer. x. 23.

"This Book should be the business man's book: then he would sweat nobody, injure nobody; would help everybody; would say, The loaf of bread is mine to share with a man who has no loaf." —Harper.

He who opposes honesty never had any.

"It is not necessary for me to live, but it is necessary for me to maintain my character and to please God."—Harper.

Revenge and its Antidote.—I. The sin and folly of revenge. 1. It is culpable. 2. It is foolish. II. The antidote to revenge. 1. It springs from faith. 2. It is realized through prayer, patience, and hope.—Pul. Com.

Revenge.—We do not understand this proverb to forbid the bringing of men who have wronged us to the bar of human justice, for this may be a duty which we owe to society. It would be criminal in most cases not to apprehend one who had robbed us if it lay in our power to do so, for by letting him go free we should be exposing other innocent men to danger. But there are many cases in which men are greatly wronged in ways which do not come within the cognizance of human law, and when no benefit to anyone would arise from their punishment by any human instrumentality. In such cases, the sure remedy for any vindictive feelings in our own breasts is to lay the matter before Him whose judgment must be impartial, and who will render to every man according to his works. Waiting upon the Lord, too, will remind us so forcibly of our own shortcomings and wrongdoings that we shall be more ready to forget those of our brother.—Hom. Com.

26—28. (26) scattereth, R. V., "winnoweth," as vs. 8. wheel,[a] the threshing roller. This separates the chaff from the wheat. (27) spirit, or life; that wh. God breathed into us, wh. distinguishes us from the lower animals:[b] what Christians call "conscience." inward, etc., i. e. his most secret thoughts. (28) Mercy and truth, by calling forth the affection of the people; comp. ch. iii. 3, xvi. 6—12. mercy, i. e. reciprocal love. "The subject's love is the king's life-guard."

Power of Mercy.—The necessity of mingling mercy with justice is strikingly exemplified in the great success which attended the efforts of the late Captain Maconochie to benefit the convicts in our penal settlement in Norfolk Island. Having, in his capacity as Secretary to the Governor of Tasmania, seen most terrible and hardening effects from unmixed severity, he desired earnestly to try what could be done by combining mercy with discipline and punishment. For this purpose he was placed in command of Norfolk Island, and remained there four years, having under his care from 1500 to 2000 convicts. Previous to his arrival they worked in chains, and it was considered dangerous for even armed officers to approach within three yards of them. It was considered unsafe to trust them with knives, and they therefore tore their food with their hands and teeth. But under more humane treatment the entire colony became changed, and one of his colleagues testifies that he and another superintendent "resided at one of the settlements in a cottage without lock and key, with simply a latch to the door, and close to the convict barracks, where over 2000 were lodged every night, also without locks." "Not a single serious offence," says he, "was ever committed in that time by any of those men, and the only bodyguard was another free superintendent and myself, together with a few trustworthy men selected from among themselves." This gentleman (Mr. J. Simms, since Governor of Plymouth Prison) goes on to say, "I shall ever remember this year as the most remarkable of all my prison experience, because it was a fair result of what might be realized from any body of men generally, thus treated, not by force, iron force, but by moral means." One remarkable example is given: At Sydney there had been a most desperate and unmanageable convict named Anderson. He was sent for life to Port Macquarie Convict Station, where he was again and again flogged. He made his escape, and lived among the natives for some time, but, ultimately, being recaptured, he was sent to Norfolk Island for the crime of murder. Under Maconochie's humane treatment he became a changed man, and when the Governor of New South Wales visited the settlement he particularly noticed Anderson, and inquired, "What smart fellow may that be?"—Leisure Hour.

29, 30. (29) their strength, bodily vigor.[c] 1 Jno. ii. 14. beauty, i. e. glory; "the grey head gives an honorable look, wh. suggests wisdom and experience."—Pul. Com. (30) blueness, etc., R. V., "Stripes that wound cleanse away evil." so do stripes, etc., better, "and strokes that reach," etc. The stings of conscience, warning and reproofs which penetrate to the inmost recesses of the heart, chastisement which affects the whole spiritual being—these are needful to the correction and purification of inveterate evil. inward, etc., R. V., "and strokes reach the innermost parts," i. e. the sinner for his remedy needs strokes wh. go down deep into the flesh, as vs. 27.[d]

Pain in the Present may Prevent Greater Pain in the Future.—When the surgeon is called in to examine a wounded man, the examination of the wound may give him more pain than he would have suffered if he had been let alone; it may bring far more present suffering to extract the ball, or to insert the probe, than it would have done simply to bandage the wound. But the pain of to-day is to ensure days of healthful rest by and by; if the present suffering was not inflicted, months and years of pain in the future might be the result. The pain of mind or body inflicted upon a child of five or ten years old, is intended by its parent to prevent greater moral or physical pain when he is fifty or seventy. And the All-wise and Loving Father, God, subjects His children to pain in the present life to prevent a deeper and more lasting pain in the life to come. —Preachers' Com.

[a] Is. xxviii. 27, 28.

[b] "Such a life, with all its powers of insight, consciousness, reflection, is as a lamp wh. God has lighted, throwing its rays into the darkest recesses of the heart." — Spk. Com.

"Knowledge of any description is good and desirable, but there are two beings of whom it is moral death to remain in ignorance —ourself and God. The spirit of a man is the power by which he apprehends both."—Preacher's Com.

"God's vicegerent in the soul." —Buchan.

"Conscience, therefore, requires continual culture, watching, assistance; it must for ever draw its vitality from the God of rghteousness."

[c] Pr. xvi. 31, xvii. 6.

[d] "Trials bring man face to face with God—God and he touch."—F. W. Robertson.

"The chief glory of youthful strength is here —the power to resist temptation, to live a true life, to fight all lies and shameful thoughts and deeds, and stand up firmly for the right."— Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIRST.

1, 2. (1) as the rivers, etc., R. V., "the water courses," the irrigating channels,[e] or the rivers, wh. God fills as He pleases, and guides on their free course through the valleys. It is implied that God uses kings for the blessing of His people. And it is also implied that there is no independent sovereignty. (2) Every way, etc., see ch. xvi. 2.[f]

God and the Human Race (vss. 1—3).—In these verses we have God unfolded to us—I. As the Controller of human hearts. 1. This is an undoubted fact; 2. It interferes not with human responsibility. II. As the Judge of human character. God judges character—1. Not according to their own estimate; 2. Not according to the result of their conduct; 3. But by the heart. III. As the approver of human goodness.—Thomas.

In God's Hand.—The heart of the powerful is in the hand of God. "As rivers of water he turneth it," etc. In the formation of this globe, in the arrangement of land and water, in the upbuilding of the great mountains, in the cutting of the fruitful plains, in the tracing of the fertilizing streams, we recognize the hand of God. He has used a great variety of agencies to bring about all these and all such results; but everything on the surface of the globe bears the impress of his wise hand. The rivers do not run where they list—they flow along the water-courses which his wisdom has arranged. And so with the hearts of the great and the strong, of the king and the counsellor, of the warrior and the minister. God has access to them; he can as easily touch and affect them in their thoughts and judgments as he can determine the channels in which the springs shall run. He can arrest them in their purpose; he can change or even reverse their course. Our human minds, as well as all material objects, are subject to his sway, and own the touch of his controlling hand. Therefore we never need despair, but should always hope. For in the darkest hour we know that we have one resource. When we can touch no other human or earthly springs, we can make our appeal to God. We can seek to "move the hand which moves the universe," and which "turneth the hearts of kings whithersoever he will." We are sure that God is never regardless of, or indifferent to, the course which his strong sons are taking. He is ruling the world in the interest of righteousness. He is willing, and indeed wishful, to be sought by those who love and trust him. Let the people of God, therefore, cherish hope in the midst of dire trouble and impending evil; and let the enemies of God beware. One touch of the Divine finger, and their fine fabric of oppression falls instantly to the ground.—Clarkson.

3, 4. (3) do justice, etc., moral obedience is superior to ceremonial worship in view of the moral char. of God; the comparative unimportance of ceremonial comes into full view in the later Jewish literature.[a] (4) high look, haughtiness of eyes; the expression of pride. proud heart, in wh. conceited and boastful feelings are cherished. plowing, R. V., "even the lamp of the wicked is sin;" "light" is used tropically as the symbol for "joy." Sentiment: The haughtiness of sinners, altho' a matter of joy to them, is sin in the sight of God.—Stuart. sin, this it is, however attractive its aspect may be.

The Good Deed.—By "the plowing of the wicked" we are to understand the whole scope of their work; all that the wicked man does is sinful. Beware of the discrimination which seeks to distinguish between the doer and the deed. If a bad man could do good deeds, then the necessity for regeneration would be disproved. If a good tree could bring forth bad fruit, or a bad tree could bring forth good fruit, essential relations would be changed. The Bible teaches us everywhere that everything depends upon the state of the heart, and that though deeds may be relatively good and temporarily of great value, yet as water cannot rise above its level, so no deed can rise above the moral level of the doer.—Parker.

5—7. (5) diligent, here, "keeps steadily on,"[a] in opposition to "excited haste," the contrast is bet. steady industry and rashness.[b] Fortunes suddenly gained are often as suddenly lost; wealth earned by patient

[e] "Some suppose there is an allusion to a gardener directing the rills of water through the different parts of his ground, and that the comparison is between the ease with which the gardener does this, and the ease with wh. the Almighty controls the purposes and volitions of the human soul."—Thomas.

[f] Pr. xiv. 12, xvi. 25.

"God is a kind Father. He sets us all in the places where he wishes us to be employed; and that employment is truly 'our Father's business.' "—John Ruskin.

"Often men have more reason to apologize for being rich than for being poor."

"Only the Golden Rule of Christ can bring the golden age of man."—Frances E. Willard.

[a] 1 Sa. xv. 22; Ps. 1, 7—15; Is. i. 11; Ho. vi. 6; Mi. vi. 7, 8.

"This maxim of the Prov. was a bold saying then; it is a bold saying still."—Stanley.

Swelling of heart.

[a] "The man who labors in substantial and continuous methods, as opposed to the impatient, restless fortune-hunter, who is easily led to adopt base and deceitful modes of acquiring."—O. Zockler.

[b] "Undue hurry is as fatal to success as undue procrastination."—Spk. Com.

labor is usually well stored. (6) by a lying tongue, put generally for deceptive methods.[c] vanity, etc., R. V., "Is a vapour driven to and fro; they that seek them seek death." Evil methods of gaining wealth generally end in disaster. The word vanity suggests the fig. of chaff or stubble in the wind. seek death, comp. ch. viii. 36, xvii. 19. (7) robbery, R. V., violence." destroy them, R. V., "sweep them away," shall return to plague the violent robbers. do judgment, or that wh. is just and right.

Covetousness.—Tarpeia, the daughter of Tarpeius, keeper of the Roman capitol, agreed to betray it into the hands of the Sabines, on this condition: "that she should have for her reward that which they carried on their left arms," meaning the golden bracelets they wore upon them. The Sabines having been let in by Tarpeia, according to compact, Titulus, their king, though well pleased with carrying the place, yet detesting the manner in which it was done, commanded the Sabines to give the fair traitor her promised reward, by throwing to her all they wore on their left arms; on which, unclasping his bracelet from his left arm, he cast that, together with his shield, upon her. All the Sabines following the example of their chief, the traitress was speedily overwhelmed with the number of bracelets and bucklers heaped upon her, and thus perished miserably under the weight of the reward which she had earned, by the double treachery, to her father and to her country.—Whitecross.

8, 9. (8) froward, perverse, or crooked. strange, the Heb. word used here means, guilt-burdened; R. V., "The way of him that is laden with guilt is exceeding crooked." right, and therefore is sure to have right issues. "What is right is evermore expedient, binding, and performable." (9) corner,[d] a turret, or pinnacle on the roof. brawling, R. V., "contentious."[e] wide house, lit. "house of companionship."

The Unregenerate and the Regenerate (vss. 8, 9).—I. The way of the unregenerate—1. Is froward; 2. Strange; neither the original nor the authorized way. II. The way of the regenerate—1. Pure; 2. Right in action. A right work implies—(1) A right standard; (2) A right motive.—Thomas.

House-roofs in the East.—How pleasant soever the arbor, or wicker-closet upon the roof, may be during the burning heats of summer, it must be very disagreeable in the rainy season. They who lodge in either at that time, must be exposed continually to the storm beating in upon them from every quarter. In allusion, perhaps, to this uncomfortable situation, Solomon observes: "It is better to dwell in a corner of the house-top, than with a brawling woman in a wide house:" in a corner formed with boughs or rushes into a little arbor, which, although cool and pleasant in the dry and sultry months of summer, is a cool and cheerless lodge when the earth is drenched with rain, or covered with snow. It appears that the booths were generally constructed in the corner, where two walls met, for greater safety; for, on the middle of the roof, they had been too much exposed to the storm. This is confirmed by Dr. Russel, who remarks, in a manuscript note, that these booths in Syria are often placed near the walls; so minutely correct are even the most incidental observations of the inspired writers.—Paxton.

10, 11. (10) desireth, loveth and seeketh. neighbour .. eyes, i. e. "on account of his violent wickedness and selfishness, even his friend experiences no sympathy from him."[a] (11) When, etc., comp. ch. xix. 25. The idea of the vs. is, that while the simple will only learn by the terrors of punishment,[b] the wise learn by teaching.

The Way of Evil.—The way of evil is not always agreeable at first. Evil brings its own immediate penalties. It is so with uncleanly practices, with undesirable habits that may afterwards grow into luxuries. Many a young man has had to fight his way into slavery. When he first tasted the thing, it was deadly; he said he revolted from it. The enemy said, Try it again. He tried it again; it was little better. A third time, and it was not so unmanageable; a fourth time, a twelfth time, and then he desired it. Think of a free young soul fighting its way determinedly into bondage! This is possible. Oh, mysterious human nature! "how abject, how august!" When does a man lose his soul? We speak of the loss of the soul sometimes as if it were a momentary and complete act. There is a sense in which the loss of the soul is both momentary and

Pr. xii. 11, xiii. 11, xix. 2, xx. 21, xxviii. 20.

[c] "Falsehood is a great fortune-maker here in England, and although it is a short and popular road, it is ultimately a ruinous one." — Dav. Thomas.

"Only that will bring forth a great harvest which is in harmony with the structure and the purpose of the universe. We must work by the ways of God, and by eternal ordinances." — Parker.

[d] "The corner of the flat roof of an Eastern house was exposed to all changes of weather, and the point of the Proverb lies in the thought that all winds and storms wh. a man might meet with there are more endurable than the tempest within. — Spk. Com.

[e] Socrates being asked, "Why he endured his wife?" replied, "By this means I have a schoolmaster at home, and an example how I should behave myself abroad. For I shall be the more quiet with others, being thus daily exercised and taught in the forbearing of her."

[a] "So strongly does he desire to do evil that he will not even spare his friend if in his way."—Fausset.

[b] "Let the law be executed upon a scorner, and even he that is simple will be awakened and alarmed by it, and will discern, more than he did, the evil of sin, and will take warning by it." — Mat. Henry.

Ps. lxiv. 7—9.

complete. There is another sense in which a man loses his soul little by little. That is the loss to fear. The soul goes down in volume: the will is more reluctant in good directions; the heart has lost its eagerness to pray. The church is not now the sweet necessity of the week.—People's B.

True Wisdom.—

Learn to be wise, and practice how to thrive:
That I would have thee do; and not to spend
Your coin on every bauble that you fancy
On every foolish brain that humors you.
I would not have you to invade each place,
Nor thrust yourself on all societies,
Till men's affections, or your own desert,
Should worthily invite you to your rank.
He that is so respectless in his courses,
Oft sells his reputation at cheap market.
Nor would I that you should melt away yourself
In flashing bravery, lest while you affect
To make a blaze of gentry to the world,
A little puff of scorn extinguish it,
And you be left like an unsavory snuff,
Whose property is only to offend.
I'd ha' you sober and contain yourself:
Not that your sail be bigger than your boat;
But mod'rate your expenses now (at first)
As you may keep the same proportion still.
Nor stand so much on your gentility,
Which is an airy and mere borrow'd thing
From dead men's dust and bones; and none of yours, Except you make, or hold it.—Ben Jonson.

12. righteous, etc., the word man is not necessary. The reference is to God as the "righteous One."[a] overthroweth, or precipitates: "He will cast the wicked headlong into evil."—Stuart.

13. stoppeth .. poor, as determined to give no heed to his cry. Disregard of the poor and needy is sin against the brotherhood. cry himself, the law of retribution will surely reach him.[b] "If the cries of the poor be not heard by us, they will be heard against us."

The Cry of the Poor (vs. 10).—Let us consider three things. I. Social distress—the poor. 1. The deserving poor; 2. The undeserving. II. Social heartlessness. Who should regard this cry? 1. The wealthy; 2. The legislating. III. Social retribution.—Thomas.

The Cry of Poverty.—There are not wanting signs that the whole civilization of Europe may be endangered by a huge social upheaval. The scandalous inequality of lots is glaringly apparent to all, and the privileges of the few may be ruthlessly torn from them in the interest of the many. If the volcano overflows there will be little respect for vested interests, abstract rights, or personal claims. But if we dread a violent revolution which might shatter the whole fabric of civilization, we must attend to the cry of poverty. To disregard this is to sit on the safety-valve while we wait for the coming explosion.—Pul. Com.

14. gift, usually, as here, with the idea of a bribe. in secret, so delicately done that none may know it, and the honor of him who takes it may seem to be preserved. Zöckler prefers the idea that skillful liberality is meant here.[a] pacifieth, or bends, extinguishes. a reward, R. V., "present," this word suggests that the reference in both sentences is to bribes.[b] in the bosom, i. e. the lap or fold of the garment where it is secreted.

Fitz-James and His Sovereign.—It is said of Sir John Fitz-James, that the instant he was seated on the bench, he lost all recollection of his best friends, that would in the least degree have interfered with the administration of justice. A relation once solicited a favor from him. "Come to my house," said he, "and I will deny you nothing; but in the king's court I must do you justice." The attorney-general was weak and criminal enough to request his interest on the part of the king, in a cause to be tried before him. "I will do the king right," he "And here lies the difference between the godly and the wicked; not that the one is pure from evil, and the other commits it, but that the one does it from constraint, the other from delight. The one testifies —'What I hate'—the other — What my soul desireth — 'that do I.' As the fruit of this native cherished principle, self to the wicked is both his god and his object." — Bridges.

[a] Comp. Pr. xxii. 12; Job xxxiv. 17.

"By this righteous one God is meant, the supreme judge and rewarder."— O. Zockler, etc.

"The just man thinks maturely concerning the house of the wicked, that he may draw away the wicked from evil."—Vulgate.

[b] Illus. in Matt. xviii. 23—34.

"Howard's rule was this, 'That our superfluities give way to other men's convenience; that our conveniences give way to other men's necessaries; and that even our necessaries give way sometimes to other men's extremities.' " — Dav. Thomas.

"Charity is the scope of all God's commands." — St. Chrysostom.

[a] "Covetousness is commonly a master sin, and has the command of other lusts."— Henry.

"I desire to reconcile me to his friendly peace: 'tis death to me, to be at enmity; I hate it, and desire all good men's love." — Shakespeare.

[b] Ex. xxiii. 8; De. xvi. 19; Ec. x. 19.

replied. A verdict was given against the crown, and the attorney-general expostulated with Fitz-James, who dismissed the subject by adding, "I could not do his majesty right, if I had not done justice."—Cheever.

15, 16. (15) joy, etc., virtue is its own reward. Righteous ways are pleasant ways. The idea here is that the righteous love right doing, and do not need the impulse of gift or reward. destruction shall be, the R. V. is better: "But it is a destruction to, etc." workers of iniquity, who act unrighteously, on consideration of bribes. (16) wandereth, at his own will. This word is contrasted with remain, or abide. The man may think he wanders, but really he remains.[c] dead, Heb. Rephaim, giants.[d] He shall meet with a sudden or speedy death.

The Wanderer's Gloomy State (vs. 16).—I. What is meant by wandering out of the way of understanding? 1. The book of nature and of Providence is the way of understanding; 2. So is the Book of Revelation; 3. The place of pure worship. II. Observe the wanderer's gloomy state. 1. The dead are those who are dead in sin; 2. Those who are doomed to eternal death.—Phillips.

Robbing the Widow.—Sir Thomas More's Judgment.—A gentleman of rank had wronged a poor widow of a sum of money, and was ordered by Sir T. More, when lord chancellor, forthwith to make restitution of the property, with the costs attending the suit. "I hope then your lordship will grant me a long day to pay." "I will grant your motion," instantly replied the chancellor. "Monday next is Barnabas day, which is the longest in the whole year; pay it then to the widow without fail, or I will commit you to the Fleet Prison."

17, 18. (17) pleasure, indulgence, costly luxury. Things opposed to business, and serious duty. poor man, bec. a pleasure-seeking life is expensive, and drains income, instead of adding to it. wine and oil, or perfume; the familiar symbols of social festivity.[e] (18) a ransom, an atonement, or propitiation. "The wicked and transgressor shall bring on themselves the evil wh. they intended to do to the righteous and thus their own destruction shall ransom the righteous fr. the doom to wh. they had assigned him."—Stuart.

Self-indulgence (vs. 17).—I. It involves an extravagance of expenditure. II. A fostering of laziness. Hence it leads to—1. Material poverty; 2. Intellectual poverty; 3. Spiritual poverty.—Thomas.

A Striking Incident.—"Mr. Gaule, a police-court missionary in Birmingham, relates a recent experience, one out of many in his fourteen years of labor. A young married woman, twenty-eight years of age, died a shocking death from drinking. Up to the age of twenty-six she had been a teetotaller, and did not know what the taste of drink was. She was a leading member of the Gospel Temperance Mission, and sang the solos at the meetings. Then she was taken ill, the doctor ordered brandy, and it proved like the first taste of blood to a tame tiger. She could never again be kept from it, and at last it killed her. The craving there must have been in the very blood."—Exp. Bib.

19. better, etc., comp vs. 9.[a] wilderness, Heb. "the land of the desert." contentious, or quarrelsome. angry, R. V., "fretful." "Even those that are one flesh, if they be not withal one spirit, have no joy of their union."

Matrimonial Misery (vs. 19).—I. The torturing power of a brawling wife. II. Even uncomfortable positions are preferable to her company. 1. The corner of a housetop; 2. The wilderness. III. The demoralizing power of sin. IV. The caution required in matrimonial alliances.—Thomas.

Fatal Bonds.—Everyone has known some pair chained together by human laws where the heart's union has either never existed or been rent asunder. Two ships at sea are bound together by strong, short chains. As long as the sea remains perfectly calm, all may be well with both; though they do each other no good, they may not inflict much evil. But the sea never rests long, and seldom rests at all. Woe to these two ships when the waves begin to roll. There are two conditions in which they might be safe. If they were either brought more closely together, or more widely separated, it might yet be well with them. If they were from stern to stern riveted into one, or if the chain were

"We learn that gifts should be quiet, unobtrusive, unobserved; and the same is true of all acts of kindness."

[c] "A slight tone of irony is perceptible in the word for 'abide.' 'He shall find a resting-place, but it shall be in Hades.'" —Spk. Com.

[d] "Here is a clear testimony to a state of retribution after death."—Wordsworth.

Jer. xiv. 10.

"Many delight more in giving of presents than in paying their debts." — Sir Philip Sidney.

"There is no joy in the world to be compared for depth and purity to that of the good conscience." —Pul. Com.

[e] Ps. civ. 15; Pr. xxvii. 9.

Economy is income.

"Profligate voluptuousness, with its expensive viands, its luxurious refinements, its costly establishments, and its foolish pastimes, makes light work with fortunes."—Dav. Thomas.

"More and more it appears that the power of wine is the power of the animal within us, which dies slowly."

[a] 1 Cor. vii. 15.

In the Scanda Purana it is said, "It is better for any one to fall into hell, than to perform the duties of a householder with a woman who will not respect her husband's word."

"Two things well considered would prevent many quarrels; first, to have it well ascertained whether we are broken, and they were left to follow independently their several courses, there would be no further cause of anxiety on their account. If they are so united that they shall move as one body, they are safe; if they move far apart, they are safe. The worst possible position is to be chained together, and yet have separate and independent motion in the waves. They will rasp each other's sides off, and tear open each other's heart, and go down together.—Arnot.

20, 21. (20) oil, "the precious unguent wh. represents wealth." By care and diligence the wise preserve and increase wealth.[b] spendeth it up, R. V., "swalloweth it up:" wastes it. (21) followeth after, earnestly seeking, really endeavors to live righteously and charitably. life . . honour, in addition to the "righteousness" he seeks.[a] In the long run public respect, and places of honor, are sure to come to the good.

Evils of Profligacy.—To burn away, in mad waste, the Divine aromas and plainly celestial elements from our existence; to change our holy of holies into a place of riot; to make the soul itself hard, impious, barren! Surely a day is coming, when it will be known again what virtue is in purity and continence of life; how divine is the blush of young human cheeks; how high, beneficent, sternly inexorable if forgotten, is the duty laid, not on women only, but on every creature, in regard to these particulars. Well, if such a day never come again, then I perceive much else will never come. Magnanimity and depth of insight will never come; heroic purity of heart and of eye; noble, pious valor, to amend us and the age of bronze and lacquer, how can they ever come? The scandalous bronze-lacquer age of hungry animalisms, spiritual impotencies and mendacities will have to run its course, till the pit swallow it. —Carlyle.

22—24. (22) scaleth, etc., as illus. 2 Sam. v. 6—9; 1 Chr. xi. 6—9. In war counsel and good judgment are of more importance than brute strength.[b] strength, the tower or fortress on wh. they chiefly rely. (23) Whoso, etc., comp. ch. xiii. 3, xix. 6. tongue, the unruly member.[c] (24) scorner, or scoffer,[d] R. V., "The proud and haughty man, scorner is his name; he worketh in the arrogance of pride."

The Government of the Tongue (vs. 23).—I. Such a government is necessary. From an ungoverned tongue can come—1. Troubles on self; 2. Troubles of social distress; 3. Troubles on others. II. Such a government is practicable. 1. The tongue is not an involuntary organ; 2. Consider the silence of Christ when before His insulting judges.—Thomas.

The Tongue.—There is a quaint and pertinent passage in Lyly's Euphues:—"We may see the cunning and curious work of Nature, which hath barred and hedged nothing in so strongly as the tongue, with two rowes of teeth, and therewith two lips, besides she has placed it farre from the heart, that it should not utter that which the heart had conceived; this should also cause us to be silent, seeinge those that use much talke, though they speake truly, are never beleeved."—Exp. Bib.—— Conversation.—Tasso's conversation was neither gay nor brilliant. Dante was either taciturn or satirical. Gray seldom talked or smiled. Hogarth and Swift were very absent-minded in cmpany. Milton was unsociable, and even irritable, when pressed into conversation. Virgil was heavy in conversation. La Fontaine appeared heavy, coarse, and stupid; he could not speak and describe what he had just seen; but then he was the model of poetry. Chaucer's silence was more agreeable than his conversation. Dryden's conversation was slow and dull, his humor saturnine and reserved. Addison was good company with his intimate friends, but in mixed company he preserved his dignity by a stiff and reserved silence. Fox, in conversation, never flagged; his animation and variety were inexhaustible. Grotius was talkative. Goldsmith wrote like an angel, and talked like poor Poll. Burke was eminently entertaining, enthusiastic, and interesting in conversation. Curran was a convivial deity; he soared into every region, and was at home in all. Coleridge, in his conversation, was full of acuteness and originality. Leigh Hunt has been well termed the philosopher of hope, and likened to a pleasant stream in conversation. Fisher Ames was a powerful and effective orator, and not the less distinguished in the social circle; he possessed a fluent language, a vivid fancy, and a well-stored memory.—Chambers.

not disputing about terms rather than things; and, secondly, to examine whether that on which we differ is worth contending about." — C. Colton.

[b] "The wise man keeps a store in reserve. He gains uprightly, spends moderately, never exhausts himself." —Spk. Com.

[a] 1 Ki. iii. 11; Mat. vi. 33.

In one of England's great cathedrals rests one whose gravestone, according to his own directions, bears but the single word, Miserimus, "most miserable." He was a man of wealth and position, or his sepulchre could not have been there. This is not an infrequent confession of the rich.

[b] Ec. vii. 19, ix. 15.

"Strength, wanting judgment and policy to rule, overturneth itself."—Horace.

[c] "Give not thy tongue too great a liberty, lest it take thee prisoner. A word unspoken is, like the sword in the scabbard, thine; if vented, thy sword is in another's hand. If thou desirest to be held wise, be so wise as to hold thy tongue." —Quarles.

[d] "Humility to superiors is duty, to equals courtesy, to inferiors nobleness, and to all it's safety." —Sir Thos. More. Bishop Latimer, when examined before Bonner, at first answered without much thought but, hearing the noise of a pen behind the curtain, he concluded that his words were being taken down, and became more cautious.

25, 26. (25) killeth him, wasting away his life. His desire keeps him from health-bringing labor. Special diseases afflict the lazy and slothful. (26) coveteth greedily, lit. "every day he wisheth a wish."[a] R. V., "There is that coveteth greedily," etc. giveth, by diligent labor he gains enough and to spare.[b]

Sloth.—"Pray, sir, of what disease did your brother die?" said the Marquis Spinola one day to Sir Horace Vere. "He died, sir," was the answer, "of having nothing to do." "Alas!" said Spinola, "that is enough to kill any general of us all." Honor cannot come from idleness, but labor brings not only honor while living, but gives us a title to be regarded with respect after we have left the world. Of no man who has lived to any purpose can it ever be said that he died of having nothing to do.—Hom. Com.——Covetousness.—The countryman in the fable would needs stay till the river was run all away, and then go over dry-shod; but the river did run on still, and he was deceived in his expectation. Such are the worldling's inordinate desires: the deceitful heart promiseth to see them run over and gone, when they are attained to such a measure, and then they are stronger, wider, and more unruly than before; for a covetous heart grasps at no less than the whole world—would fain be master of all, and dwell alone, like a wen in the body, which draws all to itself. Let it have never so much, it will reach after more; add house to house, and field to field, till there be no more place to compass. Like a bladder, it swells wider and wider, the more of this empty world is put into it. So boundless, so endless, so inordinate are the corrupt desires of worldly-minded men!—Spencer.

27, 28. (27) sacrifice, etc., ch. xv. 8; Ps. l. 9. abomination, because a mere formality. with a wicked mind, hypocrisy being altogether worse than inconsistency; R. V. marg., "to atone for wickedness;" sacrifice may be used to sanction sin, then it must be most hateful. (28) false witness, ch. xix. 5, 9. heareth, attends carefully, so as to be able to report accurately, and give true testimony. constantly, R. V., "unchallenged;" R. V. marg., "so as to endure." His witness will never be put to shame.[a] Moral Qualities and Their Results (vss. 28, 29).—I. Falsehood and ruin. There are witnesses of lies in various departments of life. 1. In courts of justice; 2. In literary paths; 3. In social circles; 4. In religious teaching. II. Veracity and safety. III. Wickedness and effrontery. IV. Uprightness and self-control.—Thomas.

God's Attitude Toward the Wicked.—Their whole life is grievous to Him. "The way of the wicked is an abomination," etc. And this, not because they hold some erroneous opinions, nor because they make many serious mistakes, nor because they are betrayed into occasional transgressions; but because they determinately withhold themselves from His service; because they claim and exercise the right to dispose of their own life according to their own will; because they deliberately disregard the will of God. They are thus in a state of fixed rebellion against His rule, of settled disavowal of His claims upon them, of consequent neglect of His holy Law. Therefore their entire course or "way" is one of disobedience and disloyalty; it must be painful, grievous, even "abominable" in the sight of the Holy One. Their worship is wholly unacceptable to Him. If we "regard iniquity in our heart, the Lord will not hear us." God "desireth truth in the inward parts;" he cannot and will not accept as of any value whatever the offering that comes from a heart in a state of determined disloyalty to Himself and hatred of His law. Their worship is positively offensive. It is "an abomination" unto Him. And it is so, because: (1) It is an act of conscious rejection of His claim; the worshiper is taking His Name and His Law upon his lips, and at the very time he is consciously keeping back from God what he knows is His due. (2) It is an act of positive insult, inasmuch as it supposes that God will be indifferent to the wrong things the worshiper is doing, that He will take a few words or offerings instead of purity, truthfulness, integrity, submission.—Pul. Com.

29. hardeneth his face, is obstinate, shameless, and obdurate in his self-will. directeth, R. V., "ordereth," or considereth. He is willing to receive counsel. He acts advisedly.[a]

[a] "He carries constantly the same intense longing for possession and enjoyment, but stops with this indolent wishing and dreaming, without passing over into energetic action." — O. Zockler.

[b] Eph. iv. 28. "It is probable that nothing undermines the bodily constitution more surely than unsatisfied desire." "If the rust eats into the sword which is in constant use, how much more certainly will it destroy that which is never drawn from the scabbard."— Preacher's Com.

[a] Jno. iii. 11; 2 Pe. i. 16—18. "Each man can take his position under one or other of the divisions of this verse: we have only a right hand and a left, we have only falsehood and truth: there is no middle place in which a man may lodge himself in security and honor. With such a fact before us we may realize the day of judgment now."— Parker. "I hate anything that occupies more space than it is worth. I hate to see a load of band-boxes go along the street, and I hate to see a parcel of big words without anything in them."—Hazlitt.

[a] "There is a contrast intended bet. hardening himself, and hardening his way."— Wordsworth. "Religion should be to every man: (1) not merely a creed, but an experience; (2) not a restraint, but an inspiration; (3) not an insurance for the next world, but a program for the present world."— James Stalker.

"Hypocrites do the devil's drudgery in Christ's livery." — Mat. Henry.

[b] Ps. lxviii. 20: Ho. xiv. 3; Ac. v. 39.

Men would become weary of doing things that are merely superficial and mechanical; it is the ineffable motive, the profound conviction, that explains all the deepest religious action of life, and that sustains men in the maintenance and defence of their religious purposes.

"Man, know thyself! all wisdom centers there." —Young.

"The importation of horses was a direct breach of the law as laid down in 1 Ki. iv. 26."

"Only in proportion as a man is right is he safe, only in the degree of his true religion is he assured of prosperity and final peace." — Parker.

"This Proverb is inscribed in the cupola which lights the Manchester Exchange. It is a good skylight, but apparently too high up for the busy merchants on the floor of the Exchange to see without more effort than is to be expected of them." — Exp. Bib.

"Gentlemen, there has been no instance of a country successful in the noble arts, yet in which the youths were frivolous, the maidens falsely religious, the men slaves of money, and the Hardening the Face.—The human countenance is intended to express the feelings of the mind, and when a man is not afraid for another to read his thoughts and intentions, his face is to a great extent the index of his heart. But a bad man is unwilling that his neighbor should know what is passing within him—his thoughts and purposes will not bear the light—they are so selfish or impure that he is ashamed of them, or they are occupied with some malicious plan which must be concealed if it is to be successful. He therefore hardens his face—puts on an appearance of innocence and frankness as a cloak of the evil underneath. But this method of life is not an easy or a pleasant one—the contrast in the second clause seems to imply that such a man walks in an uneven or a miry road—it is hard to be always acting a part and to be obliged at all times to look what we do not feel, and there may come unguarded moments and unlooked-for surprises when the mask will fall and the truth come to light.—Hom. Com.

30, 31. (30) against the Lord, no resisting Him, so all life plans should be made in dependence on His will. "Wisdom that would assert itself in opposition to the Divine, is not wisdom, but sheer folly."—Zöckler. (31) horse, type of war-like strength, Ps. xx. 7. safety, or victory.[b] This is an expansion of the previous verse designed to show how vain is the confidence reposed in human means and plans.

National Defence.—The Jews were repeatedly warned against keeping cavalry. Cavalry were for pitched battles, and could only be used on the plains. But the old successful Jewish warfare was among the hills. As a question of military tactics, the advice meant that it was better for the Jews to act on the defensive in their impregnable strongholds than to descend into the field for open warfare. A deeper thought was that, while defensive warfare might sometimes be required, the Jews were not to embroil themselves in the affairs of their neighbors. This was especially desirable for a little state wedged in between the two great empires of Egypt and Assyria, like Afghanistan between Russian and India. A still deeper and more momentous thought has yet to be reached. The Jews were to learn that their true defence was not in armies, not in military prowess, not in naturally strong fortresses. God was their Rock and Tower of strength. Now, we have no reason to consider that the idea which was brought out in the history of Israel with magnificent emphasis applies to that little ancient race alone. It is true of every nation that will recognize God, that "safety is of the Lord." We undergo periodical panics concerning our national dangers. It would be well if we could rise to the position urged upon Israel by the teachers of Old Testament days.—Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SECOND.

1. good, this word is supplied from Ec. vii. 1, though it is implied here. The value of character cannot be overestimated. than great riches, these may be good, but the good name is better. Scripture does not speak against riches, but it puts them into their right and subordinate place. loving favour, "better than silver or gold is goodwill."

Riches or Reputation?—Both of these things are good in their way, but if only one of these two desirable things are open to us, we may be very well satisfied that this is not the wealth, but the worthiness, not the full treasury, but the good name and the kind regard. For—I. Wealth is very limited in its capacities. 1. It does not confer even happiness; 2. It does not supply knowledge, much less capacity, and still less wisdom; 3. It does not provide the friendship which is worthy of the name; 4. It does not include the possession of any estimable moral qualities, nor, therefore, the favor of God. Moreover—II. Wealth has its serious drawbacks. 1. It involves heavy burdens, great anxieties lest it should be lost; 2. It entails the most serious responsibility; 3. It tempts to a dishonorable and degrading self-indulgence; also to a cynical and guilty contempt of the poor and lowly. III. A good reputation includes or implies the best things. IV. A good reputation is a source of true and pure satisfaction. 1. It satisfies our self-respect; 2. It satisfies our affections. To have the "loving favor" of men is to have much true gladness of heart. V. A good reputation is a source of much power. While the bad rich man is steadily declining in his command, his humbler neighbor, who is esteemed for his wisdom and his worth, is gaining an influence for good with every passing year.—Clarkson.

A Good Name.—"Great riches can only be used in one world, whereas a good name can be carried throughout all spheres, and will abide through the lapse of all duration. We cannot have a really good name amongst men until we have a good name with God; we cannot have a good name with God until we accept His conditions and utterly repudiate our own. A name that is really good is more than a name, it is a character, it is the expression of a spiritual wealth, it is the exemplification of a deep and holy reality of conscience, rectitude, and beneficence." —Parker.——Importance of Character.—A Fable.—Be wondrous wary of your first comportments; get a good name, and be very tender of it afterwards; for it is like the Venice glass, quickly cracked, never to be mended, though patched it may be. To this purpose, take along with you this fable. It happened that Fire, Water, and Fame went to travel together. They consulted that if they lost one another how they might be retrieved, and meet again. Fire said, "Where you see smoke, there you shall find me." Water said, "Where you see marsh, and moorish low ground, there you shall find me." But Fame said, "Take heed how you lose me; for, if you do, you will run a great hazard never to meet me again: there is no retrieving of me."—Howell.

2. meet together,[a] everywhere in life we find both. Cottage homes for the poor lie close behind the squares and mansions of the rich. maker .. all,[b] humanity is one, the relation of all to God overrides distinctions of rank. "Before the common relationship, all circumstantial distinctions vanish."

The Equality of Men (vs. 2).—I. Clearly state the subject. II. Show that it is the will of God that there should be distinctions of rich and poor in the world. 1. Evident from Scripture; 2. It is not inconsistent with God's justice, and is an argument for His wisdom. III. Application. 1. The rich should acknowledge God in all their enjoyments; 2. The poor should be contented; 3. Apart from riches and poverty, all men are equal—they have the same nature, the same care of Providence, the same Christian privileges, the same judgment.—Grove.

3. foreseeth, comp. ch. xxvii. 12. Foresight is an important practical quality. True wisdom is always associated with forecast. punished, R. V., "suffer for it." "He who will not be ruled by the rudder must be ruled by the rock."

Judgment and Prudence.—A ship may be well equipped both as to sails and as to guns, but if she be destitute both of ballast and of rudder, she can neither fight with effect nor fly with adroitness, and she must strike to a vessel less strong, but more manageable; and so it is with men; they may have the gifts both of talent and of wit, but unless they have also prudence and judgment to dictate the when, the where, and the how those gifts are to be exerted, the possessors of them will be doomed to conquer only where nothing is to be gained, but to be defeated where everything is to be lost; they will be outdone by men of less brilliant but more convertible qualifications, and whose strength, in one point, is not counterbalanced by any disproportion in another.—Colton.——Prudence.—He that goes too near sin to-day, may fall into it to-morrow. God has been so indulgent as to give us a latitude and liberty to exercise a pious zeal over ourselves, that we may show how much we fear to offend Him, and a cautious Christian will say with St. Paul, "All things are lawful, but all things are not expedient." Prudence will not always venture to the brink of innocence.—Boyle.

4. By humility, R. V., "The reward of humility;" humility comes only with the fear of Jehovah and results in riches, etc.

Two Graces and Their Reward.—I. Two graces. 1. The social grace: "Humility;" 2. The religious grace: "The fear of the Lord." II. A threefold reward. 1. Riches; 2. Honor; 3. Life.—Pul. Com.

Advantages of Humility.—The high mountains are barren, but the low valleys are covered over with corn; and accordingly the showers of God's grace fall into lowly hearts and humble souls. The more poor matrons of vanity. Not from all the marble of the hills of Luni will such a people ever shape one statue that may stand nobly against the sky; not from all the treasures bequeathed to them by the great dead will they gather, for their own descendants, any inheritance but shame." — John Ruskin.

"Talents are nurtured best in solitude, but character on life's tempestuous sea." — Goethe.

[a] Strike against, encounter each other. Not here used in an antagonistic sense.

[b] Ac. xvii. 25, 26.

" 'Poor' signifies a person who is weak and uninfluential, but not necessarily destitute or even in want. The 'poor' are those who form the vast majority of every society, and are sometimes described by the word 'masses.' " — Harper.

"The rich and the poor have much in common. They have, in fact, everything in common which is independent of silver and gold."

"Destructive to all usefulness is that excessive prudence upon which some professors pride themselves; they are never able to strike a blow, much less fight a battle for the Lord Jesus."

"To be humble to our superiors is duty; to our equals, courtesy; to our inferiors, generosity." — Feltham.

"We should often have reason to be ashamed of our most brilliant actions if the world could see the motives from which they spring." — La Rochefoucauld.

"The grace of humility is discovered in an earnest effort to press forward energetically, without a thought of self or a care for the admiration of the world."

[a] "Self-willed stubbornness has always led men into perplexities." — Dav. Thomas.

[b] "Let him that would be little in temptation be much in prayer. True prayer strikes at the root of all sin, and by it our souls are preserved safe in God's keeping." — Quoted by Nicholls.

"The man who is most perversely bent on his purposes is most likely to be thwarted in them." — Bridges.

"There is small chance of truth at the goal where there is not a childlike humility at the starting post." —Coleridge.

[c] "Comp. German proverbs, 'Young accustomed is done old.' 'What little Johnnie does not learn, Johnnie learns never.' And the familiar Eng. prov., 'Just as the twig is bent the tree is inclined.' " — O. Zockler.

[d] "The Prov. enjoins the closest possible study of each child's temperament, and the adaptation of his 'way of life' to that."—Spk. Com.

"A man must live near to God if he is to make God real to his children. A moin spirit, the more self-empty, the more earnestly we are desirous of spiritual things; and such shall be filled.—Worthington.——True Humility.—True humility calls no man master, and seems to worldly men to be pride, but it is only its deep deference to God that enables it to set man in his own lowly place. True humility prefers mercy to sacrifice; does good and is silent; bears suffering and is patient; looks to Christ, sits at His feet, and learns only from Him. True humility will bid the priest, the Church, the minister, and the schoolmen remain, as Abraham his servants, at the bottom of the mount, while it rises to the loftiest crag of that mount, and deals alone with God, and holds communion with Him only. True humility counts holiness far more splendid than robes and phylacteries, prefers beneficence to ceremony, lives a divine life. It wears not a hair-cloth shirt, nor whines when it speaks, nor puts on a sour and repulsive countenance, nor fancies that God can only be approached, and religion spoken of, in sepulchral tones. But it does not seem to men to fast. It fasts before God. There is nothing of display and parade that would indicate that it was of earth, everything to prove that it is implanted within from its Father in heaven.—Cumming.

5. Thorns and snares, fig. of the perils of life. froward, set in contrast with the man of humility who fears the Lord. "He is the man of unbridled will, stubborn and headstrong."[a] keep his soul, by due watchings and self-restraints.[b] shall be, i. e. he keeps himself fr. the traps and enticements of the headstrong.

Christian Watchfulness.—As the sentinel on duty watches for the coming foe; as the sailor on deck watches for the coming danger from storm or breakers; as the watchman watches for the thief who seeks to plunder; as Satan watches for opportunities to sow tares, and ruin souls; as the worldling watches for "chances" to make a bargain; as the pleasure taker watches for seasons, times, and companies for personal enjoyment; as the lover of knowledge watches all openings for the increasing of his knowledge: so should the Christian watch for the approach of his enemies, and be prepared for conflict and victory. He should watch for the dangers which beset his passage to the haven of rest, and, by the wisdom which cometh from above, avoid them: he should watch for all occasions of usefulness in all ways in his power; for all opportunities of laying up treasure in heaven; for all means of promoting his purity and happiness; for all sources whence may flow an increase in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. "What I say unto you, I say unto all, watch." "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."—Bate.——The Snare of Evil Companions.—Cooke, who was executed for murder at Leicester, in his confession, alluded to being connected with a society, formed principally of deistical young men, who frequented a public house in that town, in which the writings of Paine, Carlile, and other infidel authors were taken in and encouraged. He emphatically added, "I considered myself a moral young man, attending as I did some place of Christian worship three times a day; till, unhappily, I got connected with the above and other infidel associations."—R. T. S.

6. Train, Heb. "initiate a child in accordance with his way;" i. e. consider the child's nature, faculties and temperament, in the education which is given to him. If, from his early years, a child is thus trained, "when he is old, he will not depart from it." This way, this education in accordance with his idiosyncrasy, will bear fruit all his life long; it will become a second nature, and will never be obliterated.—Pul. Com. a child, training must begin then. Childhood is the period in wh. life impressions are received.[c] way . . go, "according to the standard of his way;" the path marked out for him. The way he should go, not the way he would go.[d] not depart, bec. early habits gain fixedness for life.

Education.—I. The philosophy of education. 1. The susceptibility of childhood; 2. The durability of impressions. II. The art of education. 1. The discipline of the will; 2. Of the conscience. III. The religion of education. 1. Right views of God; 2. Obedience to His will; 3. Love of His character.—Whythe.

Sabbath-school Instruction.—Sabbath-school instruction, although good as far as it goes, does not supply adequate moral education for the juvenile hordes which infest the streets of our large cities. The interval between Sabbath and Sabbath is too wide. It is like spreading a net with meshes seven inches wide instead of one, before a shoal of herrings. By the great gap of the week the little Arabs easily slip through, in spite of the stout string which you extend across their path on the Sabbath evening. Ply the work by all means, and ply it hopefully. Labor for the Lord in that department will not be lost. Saving truth is thereby deposited in many minds, which the Spirit of God will make fruitful in a future day. Ply the work of Sabbath-schools, but let not the existence and abundance of these efforts deceive us into the belief that the work is adequately done. The Sabbath-school cannot train up a child. The six days' training at home, if it be evil, will, in the battle of life, carry it over the one day's teaching in the school, however good it may be."——Advice to Parents.—A successful parent will be one who makes the training of the children a constant and religious study. It is the last subject in the world to be left to haphazard. From the first a clear aim must be kept in view. "Is my great object that this boy shall be a true, a noble, a God-fearing man, serving his day and generation in the way God shall appoint? Is this object purged of all meaner thought? Can I renounce the idea of worldly success for him, and be indifferent to wealth and reputation, to comfort and ease for him?" When this question is satisfactorily settled, then comes a second, How is the aim to be realized? Is not the parent at once driven to God with the cry, "Who is sufficient for these things?" A mistake may be so fatal, and it is so hard to clearly see, to rightly judge, to firmly act, that nothing can avail but the direct teaching, inspiration, and power of the Spirit of God. Happy are the father and the mother who have been found in their helplessness to seek that Divine help from the very first!——The Mind Sinful.—Thelwall thought it very unfair to influence a child's mind by inculcating any opinions before it should have come to years of discretion and be able to choose for itself. I showed him my garden, and told him it was my botanical garden. "How so?" said he, "it is covered with weeds." "Oh," I replied, "that is only because it has not yet come to its age of discretion and choice. The weeds, you see, have taken the liberty to grow, and I thought it unfair in me to prejudice the soil towards roses and strawberries."—Coleridge.

7, 8. (7) ruleth over, actually gives him who possesses it an authority over others. servant, is under obligation to him, and so must beg and serve.[a] (8) soweth, etc., comp. Job vi. 1—8; Ga. vi. 7, 8. vanity, R. V., "calamity."[b] fail, trans. "the staff of his haughtiness vanisheth away." "Abused power will not last."

The Social Rule of Wealth (vs. 7).—I. This rule should always be a generous one. II. It is frequently tyrannic. III. It is ever temporary. Apply:—We are reminded—1. Of the responsibility of the rich; 2. Of the temptation of the poor; 3. Of the wisdom of the diligent.—Thomas.

Advantages of Wealth.—Wealth is an application of mind to nature; and the art of getting rich consists not in industry, much less in saving, but in a better order, in timeliness, in being at the right spot. One man has stronger arms or longer legs; another sees by the course of streams the growth of markets, where land will be wanted, makes a clearing to the river, goes to sleep, and wakes up rich. Steam is no stronger now than it was a hundred years ago; but it is put to better use. A clever fellow was acquainted with the expansive force of steam; he also saw the wealth of wheat and grass rotting in Michigan. Then he cunningly screws on the steam-pipe to the wheat crop. Puff now, O steam! The steam puffs and expands as before, but this time it is dragging all Michigan at its back to hungry New York and hungry England. Coal lay in ledges under the ground since the Flood, until a laborer, with pick and windlass, brings it to the surface. We may well call it black diamonds. Every basket is power and civilization. For coal is a portable climate. It carries the heat of the tropics to Labrador and the polar circle; and it is the means of transporting itself whithersoever it is wanted. Watt and Stephenson whispered in the ear of mankind their secret, that a half ounce of coal will draw two tons a mile; and coal carries coal, by rail and by boat, to make Canada as warm ther must hold very real converse with her Lord if His reality is to become obvious to her little ones. 'As a child,' says one, 'I always had a feeling that God and Jesus were such particular friends of mother's, and were honored more than words could tell.' If such an impression is to be created, depend upon it God and Jesus must be particular friends of yours." — Harper.

[a] "Some sell their liberty to gratify their luxury." — Mat. Henry.

[b] Ill-gotten gains will not prosper.

"The true Christian line is to shun that proud independence, which scorns the kindly offer of needful help; but at the same time to avoid all needless obligations. 'Sell not your liberty to gratify your luxury.' If possible, 'owe no man anything but love.' (Rom. xiii. 8.) 'Guard against that poverty, which is the result of carelessness or extravagance. Pray earnestly, labor diligently. Should you come to poverty by the misfortune of the times, submit to your lot humbly; bear it patiently; cast yourself in childlike dependence upon your God." —Bridges.

"Charity gives itself rich, covetousnes hoards itself poor," says the German proverb. "Give alms, that thy children may not ask them," says a Danish proverb. "Drawn wells are never dry." So give to-day, that thou mayest have to give to-morrow. Above all, if our case is that "silver and gold we have none, let us freely substitute the kindly looks and the healing words, which are worth much and cost little." — Pul. Com.

"It would seem as if God could never give back enough to him who regards the poor as his children."

"Only weak men are boisterous; only men who are uncertain of their intellectual or moral position seek to make up by noise what is wanting in truth and equity." — Parker.

Ps. ci. 6; Mat. v. 8.

"Whatever mitigates the woes or increases the happiness of others is a just criterion of goodness; and whatever injures society at large, or any individual in it, is a criterion of iniquity. One should not quarrel with a dog without a reason sufficient to vindicate one through all the courts of morality." — Goldsmith.

2 Chr. xvi. 9; Ps. xxxiv. 15.

b "He defeats all the counsels and designs of false and treacherous men, and turns them to their own confusion." — Mat. Henry.

"Cities shall fall, kingdoms shall come to nothing, empires shall fade away as the smoke, but the truth of the Lord shall continue for ever. Burn it, it will rise again; as Calcutta, and with its comforts bring its industrial power.—Emerson.

9. bountiful eye, Heb. "good of eye;" see "evil eye," ch. xxviii. 22: who looks round in kindness and friendliness; is of a beneficient disposition. be blessed, "charity being twice blessed, blessing him who gives and him who takes."

Genuine Philanthropy (vs. 9).—I. The kindliness of its disposition, "a bountiful eye." II. The beneficence of its activity. III. The reward of its service. 1. He shall be blessed with the commendation of his own conscience; 2. With the grateful affection of the poor; 3. With the approbation of God.—Thomas.

Safety of Beneficence.—Two men I knew very well, some years ago, on the streets of New York, were talking about the matter of benevolence. One said to the other, "You give too much. I will wait till I get a large pile of money, and then I will give." "No," said the other, "I will give as God prospers me." Hear the sequel. The former lives in New York city to-day, dollarless; the other gathered two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. I believe that the reason why so many people are kept poor is because they do not give enough. If a man gives in the right spirit to the Lord Jesus, and to the Church, he is ensured for time and for eternity. The Bank of England is a weak institution compared with the bank that any Christian man can draw upon. The man who stands by Christ, Christ will stand by him.—Talmage.

10, 11. (10) scorner, or scoffer, as ch. xxi. 24. Such a man excites others to contention, therefore he should be chased away.[a] reproach, R. V., "ignominy." (11) pureness of heart, he who seeks to be pure in heart, and is winsome in his speech. king .. friend, i. e. such a man is sure to win favor and acceptance. Such a man "stands fair for preferment."

Rebuking a King.—The timidity which hesitates to rebuke profanity was once shamed by a king who had been himself rebuked for profanity. Riding along the highway in disguise, and seeing a soldier at an inn, he stopped and asked him to drink ale with him. On an oath which the king uttered while they were drinking, the soldier remarked, "I am sorry to hear young gentlemen swear." His majesty took no notice of it, but swore again. The soldier immediately said, "I'll pay part of the ale, if you please, and go; for I so hate swearing that, if you were the king himself, I should tell you of it." "Should you indeed?" asked the king. "I should," was the emphatic reply of his subject. Not long after, the king gave him an opportunity to be "as good as his word." Having invited some lords to dine with him, he sent for the soldier, and bade him to stand near him, in order to serve him if he was needed. Presently the king, not now in disguise, uttered an oath; and deferentially the soldier immediately said, "Should not my lord and king fear an oath?" Looking at the heroic soldier, and then at his company of obsequious noblemen, the king severely remarked: "There, my lords, is an honest man. He can respectfully remind me of the great sin of swearing; but you can sit here and let me stain my soul by swearing, and not so much as tell me of it!"—Old. Test. Anecdotes.

12. preserve knowledge, or "exercise a protecting superintendence over those who possess His knowledge."—Thomas. overthroweth, ch. xxi. 12. words, i. e. proposals or plans.[b] transgressor, R. V., "the treacherous man."

God Preserves Knowledge.—God has preserved knowledge by causing special care to be taken of His written Word. All knowledge is preserved to us from age to age by its being communicated from one human being to another, as one generation succeeds the other, and the hand of God is to be recognized in its preservation. But this is especially true of the knowledge of God. In the days of old, God long preserved a knowledge of Himself in the world by preserving the life of Noah, of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob. They stood almost alone in the world in this respect, and were like lighthouses on a dark and stormy ocean, sheltering and preserving a moral light in the moral darkness.—Preachers' Com.——When knowledge seemed on the eve of perishing, a single copy of the Scriptures, found as it were accidentally, preserved it from utter extinction. (2 Chron. xxxiv. 14—18.) For successive generations the Book was in the custody of faithful librarians, handed down in substantial integrity. (Rom. iii. 2.) When the church herself was on the side of the Arian heresy, the same watchful eyes raised up a champion (Athanasius) to preserve the testimony. Often has the infidel transgressor labored with all the might of man for its destruction. Often has Rome partially suppressed it, or committed it to the flames, or circulated perverted copies and false interpretations. Yet all these words and deeds of the transgressors have been overthrown.—Bridges.

13. slothful man, comp. ch. xii. 24, etc.[a] lion without, i.e. with a lion in the open country he professes to be in danger in the midst of the city: a type of the unreasonable and frivolous excuses he gives for his laziness. in the streets, "in a city full of men, so timid is he."—Wordsworth.

The Characteristics of Laziness (vs. 13).—Indolence—I. Creates false excuses—1. In the secular sphere; 2. In the spiritual sphere. II. It creates unmanly excuses. Apply:—To true souls difficulties are a challenge, not a check to action.—Thomas. Note on vs. 13.—The sluggard is fond of sleep; and, to excuse his slothfulness, he makes use of the pretence, when he is to go out of his house in the morning dawn, and to follow his business, that he might fall a prey to one of the wild beasts which prowl about during the night. When it becomes dark, the people of the East shut themselves up in their houses for fear of the wild beasts. Thus Alvarez, in his account of Ethiopia, says, that "in Abyssinia, as soon as night sets in, nobody is to be seen abroad for fear of wild beasts, of which the country is full."—Rosenmüller.

Sloth.—It is full of ridiculous excuses here satirized. While a noble energy refuses to own the word "impossible," it is ever on the lips of the indolent. As in the Arabic fable of the ostrich, or "camel-bird," they said to it, "Carry!" It answered, "I cannot, for I am a bird." They said, "Fly!" It answered, "I cannot, for I am a camel." Always, "I cannot!" He who in false regard to his own soul refuses to go out into the world and do God's work, will end by corrupting and losing his soul itself.—Pulpit Com.

14, 15. (14) mouth, their wanton, seductive words, which entice a man to destruction of body and soul. strange women, Pr. ii. 16. pit,[b] such as was prepared for ensnaring wild animals. fall therein, in the wrath and judgment of the Lord.[c] (15) Foolishness, the wilfulness of ignorance and inexperience. bound, i.e. firmly fixed, so as to need chastisement for its removal. In all children there is the liability, the tendency, the habit of going wrong: in this fact lies the truth of the proverb. rod, etc., not necessarily corporal punishment. The word is used as a fig. for all the redemptive influence of wise parental chastisement.

An Evil and its Cure (vs. 15).—I. Here we have a terrible evil. 1. In its deprivation of goodness in its first stages; 2. The abnormal condition of parents; 3. The corrupt social influence under which the child is trained. II. A severe cure. These words suggest—1. The infliction of pain; 2. But from a benevolent disposition.—Thomas.

Bringing Up Children.—The late Dr. Henry Ware, when once asked by a parent to draw up some set of rules for government of children, replied by an anecdote. "Dr. Hitchcock," he said, "was settled in Sandwich; and, when he made his first exchange with the Plymouth minister, he must needs pass through the Plymouth Woods, a nine miles' wilderness, where travelers almost always got lost, and frequently came out at the point they started from. Dr. Hitchcock, on entering this much-dreaded labyrinth, met an old woman, and asked her to give him some directions for getting through the woods so as to fetch up at Plymouth, rather than Sandwich. 'Certainly,' she said, 'I will tell you all about it with the greatest pleasure. You keep right on till you get some ways into the woods, and you will come to a place where several roads branch off. Then you must stop and consider, and take the one that seems to you most likely to bring you out right.' He did so, and came out right. I have always followed the worthy and sensible old lady's advice in bringing up my children. I do not think anybody can do better; at kill it, it will live again; cut it down by the root, it will spring up again. No force shall be able to decay it. The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." — Bp. Jewell.

[a] Pr. xii. 27, xv. 19, xviii. 9, xix. 24, xxi. 25, etc. Mat. xxv. 26; Ro. xii. 11; Heb. vi. 12.

"We are safe from the lions in the way of duty, and never safe when we avoid it. Lions, when they met David feeding his sheep, were torn in pieces by him like kids." — Lawson.

"He has recourse to the most senseless and ludicrous excuses, if in any way he may not be obliged to go out to labor."—O. Zockler.

"Though heart preparation is from God, it is not given as a premium to sloth, but in proportion to the earnestness with which we seek the grace."

"The sluggard rightly apprehends danger, but mistakes the source whence it will come. There is a devouring enemy which will slay him if he do not take care, but it is not without him, but within him." —Preacher's Com.

[b] Ch. xxiii. 27.

[c] Comp. provs., "Whom the gods would destroy they first dement." "Men's pleasant vices are made whips to scourge them."

Ec. vii. 26.

Replying to scurrility is like the dandy keeping himself clean by pushing away the chimney sweeper.

"So much of the Bible as I learned at my mother's knee and at Sunday school seems to me as a Bible within a Bible."—Prof. A. A. Lipscomb.

a "The ill-gotten gains do not prosper, and only expose the oppressor to extortion and violence in his turn fr. some equally unscrupulous rich man." — Spk. Com.

Lu. vi. 33—35.

"I take him to be the truly rich man that lives upon what he has, owes nothing, and is contented; for there is no determinate sum of money that can make a man rich, since no man is truly rich that has not so much as perfectly satiates his desire of having more." —Howe.

"Of riches lawfully gained the devil takes half, of riches unlawfully gained he takes the whole and the owner too." — Turkish Proverb.

It is related of Grotius, the great scholar, that on his deathbed he exclaimed, "Ah, I have consumed my life in a laborious doing of nothing! I would give all my learning and honor for the plain integrity of John Urick!" This John Urick was a religious poor man, who spent eight hours of the day in reading and prayer, eight in labor, and only eight in sleep and meals.

" Evermore it must be remembered, that the least part of knowledge passed to man by this so large a charter from any rate, I cannot." Good common sense, doubtless, is often better than all set rules; but the thing is to have it.—Foster. Government of Children.—As for ourselves, we tried the rod on our own children, but are now trying the sugar plum on our grandchildren. Thus far, our success is remarkable. Family government has risen in popularity. Children cry for it. Our children used to look with aversion on the spot where we locked up the switch; but now there is not in the whole house a place so favorite as the drawer where is stored the sweet moral suasion. Good conduct thrives; obedience is at a premium; the will is broken; the children are governed, without knowing it. Blessings on sugar-plums!—Beecher.

16. increase, etc., better, "whoso oppresseth the poor it is for his gain; whoso giveth to the rich it is for his loss." "The riches extorted from the poor man will in the end redound to his benefit; by God's providential control the oppression and injustice from which he has suffered shall work to his good."—Pul. Com. to want, the man gives only to increase the riches which the man is squandering, so in giving him opportunity for his vices really hurries on his ruin.[a]

Abuse of Wealth.—I am no advocate for meanness of private habitation. I would fain introduce into it all magnificence, care, and beauty, where they are possible; but I would not have that useless expense in unnoticed fineries or formalities,—cornicing of ceilings, and graining of doors, and fringing of curtains, and thousands of such things,—which have become foolishly and apathetically habitual; things on which by common appliance hang whole trades, to which there never belonged the blessing of giving one ray of real pleasure, or becoming of the remotest or most contemptible use; things which cause half the expense of life, and destroy more than half its comfort, manliness, respectability, freshness, and facility. I speak from experience; I know what it is to live in a cottage with a deal floor and roof, and a hearth of mica-slate; and I know it to be in many respects healthier and happier than living between a Turkey carpet and a gilded ceiling, beside a steel grate and polished fender. I do not say that such things have not their place and propriety; but I say this emphatically, that a tenth part of the expense which is sacrificed in domestic vanities, if not absolutely and meaninglessly lost in domestic comforts and incumbrances, would, if collectively afforded and wisely employed, build a marble church for every town in England.—Ruskin.

17—19. (17) wise, a plural word indicating a collection of miscellaneous proverbs: vss. 17—21 are an introduction to the "words of the wise." (18) within thee, in thine heart, or inward parts. lips, R. V., "if they be established together upon thy lips." God asks belief with the heart and confession with the lip and the life. (19) made known, R. V., "made them known." even to thee, so the application is personal and individual.

Spiritual Verities (vss. 17—21).—The subject of these verses is spiritual verities, called excellent things. I. The experimental knowledge of them is a transcendent blessing. 1. It affords pleasure; 2. Enriches speech; 3. Inspires trust in God; 4. Establishes the faith of the soul; 5. Qualifies for usefulness. II. This knowledge is attainable. The method involves—1. Communication; 2. Attention; 3. Application; 4. Retention. —Thomas.

The Knowledge of Christ.—Here is the privilege of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, that as it is of eminence and height, so it is of use and convenience, and that in the highest measure; as it is a pearl for beauty, so it is for value. This knowledge is of universal use and convenience. It is so in reference to this life. Am I in want, in contempt, in prison, in banishment, in sickness, in death? This knowledge gives me contentedness, patience, cheerfulness, resignation of myself to His will, who hath sealed my peace with Him, and favor from Him, in the great covenant of His Son; and I can live upon this though I were ready to starve. I am assured that if it be for my good and the glory of His name, I shall be delivered; if not, I can be contented, so that my jewel, the peace of God, and my own conscience by the blood of Christ, be safe. Am I in wealth, honor, power, greatness, esteem in the world? This knowledge teacheth me humility, as knowing from whom I received it; fidelity, as knowing to whom I must account for it; watchfulness, as knowing that the honor of my Lord is concerned in some measure in my conduct; and that the higher the employment is the more obnoxious I am to temptation from without, from them that watch for my halting, and from within by a deceitful heart. Thus, in reference to the temporal condition of my life, this knowledge of Christ is of singular use; it makes a man a better philosopher than the best system of morals; it guides him in the management of all relations. This knowledge is also useful for that life which is to come, and that in the highest degree, which all other knowledge comes short of, and attains not to any one of the least of these ends.—Hale.

20, 21. (20) excellent things, Ewald suggests the trans. found in the R. V., marg. "heretofore" ("Have I not written to thee heretofore concerning counsel and knowledge.") contrasting some previous work with the expression "this day" in vs. 20. Stuart also adopts this reading. (21) answer, etc., R. V., "mayest carry back words." them that send unto thee, R. V., "send thee," we must conceive of these as being parents or tutors who send a youth to a school or wise man to be educated. The moralist expresses his desire that the disciple will carry home such wholesome, truthful doctrines as will prove that the pains expended upon him have not been useless.—Pul. Com.

"The Certainty of the Words of Truth."—We call upon all to examine for themselves. The Bible courts examination. It is the unwillingness and refusal to examine, that is most to be deplored. The genuineness of its writings, the authenticity of its histories, the reality of its recorded miracles, the fulfilment of its prophecies, the sublimity and consistent harmony of its doctrines, the purity of its precepts, the origin of its commemorative ordinances, and its tendency to personal and social virtue and happiness,—all court examination. The testimony of the celebrated Earl of Rochester, when converted from infidelity and profligacy to Christianity and virtue, will be found the truth. Laying his hand on the Bible, he would say—"This is true philosophy. This is the wisdom that speaks to the heart. A bad life is the only grand objection to this book."—Hom. Com.

22—25. Here begin the "words of wise," vss. 17—21 being introductory. (22) because .. poor, his poverty not permitting him to defend himself at law. Or, let pity for his poverty keep thee from injuring him. in the gate, where was usually the place of judgment.[a] (23) Lord, etc., i.e. God is their Advocate. spoil the soul, R. V., "despoil of life those that despoil them." (24) angry, or passionate man. Lit. an owner of rage. (25) get a snare, by copying the evil example. We usually catch the temper of those with whom we mostly associate.

Rob Not the Poor.—It requires quite an effort for us to see and realize what the Scriptures mean by the poor. We have to slip away from all the wretched associations of the Poor House, the Poor Law, and the Guardians. We have to bring before our minds a class which in a wholesome state of society would be a small, numerable minority, but in our own unwholesome state of society are a large and well-nigh innumerable majority,—not only the destitute and the actually needy, but all the people who have no land on which to live, no house which they can call their own, no reserve fund, no possibility of a reserve fund, against the unavoidable calamities and chances of life, the people who are trodden down—who tread each other down—in the race of competition. It is a too common thing for one or two greedy and selfish capitalists to form a "corner"—as the commercial slang of the day denominates it—in some article of industry, i.e., to secure all the raw material in the market, and to hold it until a famine price can be demanded. Meanwhile, the mills are idle, the looms are silent, the workpeople are unemployed, and their families suffer. Our moral sense is not yet sufficiently cultivated to condemn this hideous selfishness as severely as it deserves, and to regard the perpetrators of it as enemies of the human race. "The people curse them," that is all. But we may rest confident that He to whom vengeance belongs enters every action of the kind in His unerasable accounts, and reserves the inevitable punishment for these "oppressors of the poor." There is another evil of God, must be subject to that use for which God hath granted it, which is the benefit and relief of the state and society of man; for otherwise all manner of knowledge becometh malign and serpentine, and therefore, as carrying the quality of the serpent's sting and malice, it maketh the mind of man to swell." —Bacon.

"Wherever Gospel truth has found its way and has been embraced, there, in the marvellous changes that have been effected,—in the contrast between previous stupidity and pollution, and heartless and murderous ferocity, to intelligence, and purity and virtue, and peace, and harmony, and happiness, we have the triumphs of the Cross, and the manifestation of the 'certainty'—the divine certainty—'of the words of truth.'" —Hom. Com.

[a] Job v. 4, xxxi. 21; Ps. lxix. 12, cxxvii. 5.

"A religion which takes no knowledge of the masses is a false religion; a church and a ministry which 'understand not to know' the condition of the people and the needs of the poor are not Christ's Church and Christ's Ministry, but flagrantly apostate." — Exp. Bib.

"'He that hideth his eyes shall have many a curse!' Yes, nothing is more striking than this truth, that not only positive oppression of the poor, but modern industrial life which is alluded to in the Proverbs before us. No oppression of the poor is more terrible than that which is exercised by those who themselves are needy. The system which results from necessity of this kind is termed "sweating." The hungry contractor undertakes the job at the lowest possible price, and secures his profit by getting hungrier and weaker creatures than himself to do the work at a price lower than possible, literally at starvation wages. What force, then, to modern ears is there in the saying, "A needy man that oppresseth the poor is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food"! The Divine oversight of these industrial abuses is not, as we sometimes suppose, pretermitted. Wisdom and Justice and Love hold the reins, and though the rapacity and cupidity of men seem to have a wide range, they are inevitably pulled up in the end, if not in this partial and transient life, yet in that long Eternity through which the Eternal will work out His purposes.—Exp. B.

mere indifference to their state, mere neglect of their sufferings, involves us in sin. Nay, when we buy and use the cheap goods, which are cheap because they have been made at the cost of health and happiness and life to our brothers and our sisters their blood is upon our heads, though we choose to forget it."—Harper.

26, 27. (26) strike hands, ch. vi. 1, xvii. 18. (27) should he take, i.e. the creditor. thy bed, practice had come to override the merciful law of Ex. xxii. 27.

"Run not into debt, either for wares sold or money borrowed; be content to want things that are not of absolute necessity, rather than to run up the score. —Hale.

The Miseries of Debt.—Debt haunts the mind: a conversation about justice troubles it; the sight of a creditor fills it with confusion; even the sanctuary is not a place of refuge. The borrower is servant to the lender. A life at another man's table is not to be accounted for a life. It is mean to flatter the rich; it is humiliating to be the object of pity. To be the slave of unattainable desires is to be despicable and wretched. Independence, so essential to the virtues and pleasures of a man, can only be maintained by setting bounds to our desires, and owing no man anything. A habit of boundless expense undermines and destroys the virtues even in a mind where they seem to dwell. It becomes difficult, and at last impossible, to pay punctually. When a man of sensibility thinks of the low rate at which his word must henceforth pass, he is little in his own eyes; but difficulties prompt him to study deceiving as an art, and at last he lies to his creditors without a blush. How desolate and how woful does his mind appear, now that the fence of truth is broken down!—Chartery.

"An honest soul is like a ship at sea, that sleeps at anchor on the ocean's calm; but when it rages, and the wind blows high, she cuts her way with skill and majesty." —Beaumont and Fletcher.

28. landmarks, wh. were often merely stones laid in the furrows of the open field. These could easily be shifted by little and little.[a]

Importance of Honesty in Little Things.—The Just King.—One of the kings of Persia, who is famous in history for his exact justice, was once out hunting, when, finding himself hungry, he ordered the people to dress a deer that they had just taken. When all was nearly ready, they found that they had forgotten to bring any salt with them; so they sent a lad off to fetch some from a village at a little distance. The king overheard them, and calling to the boy, said, "And mind you take money to pay for it." The attendants expressed their surprise at his thinking of such trifles, and asked what harm there could be in taking a handful of salt. The king replied, "All the evil that now troubles the earth first began in such trifles, till by degrees it grew to its present height; and if I take the salt, my officers will perhaps seize the cow." There are many people who do not think it worth while to attend to what they are doing except upon great and important occasions; forgetting that happiness and virtue consist in those trifling occurrences of which human life is made up.

[a] For law of boundaries, etc., see De. xix. 14, xxvii. 17; Job xxiv. 2; Ho. v. 10; Pr. xxiii. 10, 11.

"Many practices of antiquity may be abandoned. We may improve upon old customs; but we cannot cast away the ten commandments." — Pul. Com.

29. diligent, R. V., marg. "skilful." Stuart, "dexterous." ch. x. 4, xxi. 5. before kings, being found worthy of high and responsible office. His talents shall be at the service of kings.[b] mean, or obscure. The diligent and faithful are sure to come to the front.

Advantage of Industry.—Industry need not wish; and he that lives upon hopes will die fasting. There are no gains without pains; then help hands, for I have no lands; or, if I have, they are smartly taxed. He that hath a trade hath an estate; and he that hath a calling hath an office of profit and honor; but then the trade must be worked at, and the calling followed, or neither the estate nor the office will enable us to pay our taxes. If we are industrious, we shall never starve; for, at the working man's house, hunger looks in, but dares not enter. Nor will the bailiff or the constable enter; for industry pays debts while despair

[b] "Of all the qualities which kings especially look to and require in the choice of their servants, that of despatch and energy in the transactions of business is the most acceptable."—Lord Bacon.

"Caxton was a diligent man, and by his diliincreaseth them.—Franklin. Pleasures of Industry.—Industry is not only the instrument of improvement, but the foundation of pleasure; for nothing is so opposite to the true enjoyment of life as the relaxed and feeble state of an indolent mind. He who is a stranger to industry may possess, but he cannot enjoy. It is labor only that gives a relish to pleasure. It is the indispensable condition of our possessing a sound mind in a sound body. Idleness is so inconsistent with both, that it is hard to determine whether it be a greater foe to virtue, or to health and happiness. Inactive as it is in itself, its effects are fatally powerful. Though it appears a slowly-flowing stream, yet it undermines all that is stable and flourishing. It is like water, which first putrefies by stagnation, and then sends up noxious vapors, filling the atmosphere with death.—Blair.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-THIRD.

1—3. (1) with a ruler, who is sure to provide dainties and great abundance. consider, etc., R. V. "him that is before thee," some take the reference to be to the dainties; others to be to the character of the ruler in whose presence you are placed. (2) knife .. throat, Eastern fig. for putting restraint on the appetite. given to appetite,[a] accustomed to look for delicacies, and disposed to self-indulgence. One who cherishes and maintains strong desires. (3) dainties, comp. Ge. xxvii. 4. "Be not too greedy of the bounties of the royal table, so as to forget discretion and be led to say and do things which are inexpedient or unseemly." deceitful meat, i.e. having other purpose than you suspect. Oftentimes such entertainment is not offered for friendship's sake, but for some sinister purpose—to make a man expose himself, to get at a man's real character or secrets. Far from being a sign of favor and good will, the seeming honor is deceptive and dangerous.—Pul. Com.

Sycophancy and Independence.—I. He who depends on a great man puts himself in his power. II. Such a dependence on the great is sure to be disappointing. The sycophant succeeds in obtaining a place at the banquet. But he cannot enjoy the feast like those guests who meet the host on terms of equality. III. The only safe dependence is that of man on God. This is not degrading, but ennobling; for God is worthy of all trust, honor, and adoration. IV. Among men the safest condition is one of manly independence. We want to learn to be friendly with all men, and, at the same time, self-reliant through inward dependence on God alone.—Pul. Com.

Dean Swift and the Lady.—A lady invited Dean Swift to a most sumptuous dinner. She said, "Dear Dean, this fish is not as good as I could wish, though I sent for it half across the kingdom, and it cost me so much," naming an incredible price. "And this thing is not such as I ought to have for such a guest, though it came from such a place, and cost me such a sum." Thus she went on, decrying and underrating every article of her expensive and ostentatious dinner, and teasing her distinguished guest with apologies, only to find a chance to display her vanity, in bringing her trouble and expense into view, until she exhausted his patience. He is reported to have risen in a passion, and to have said, "True, madam, it is a miserable dinner; and I will not eat it, but go home and dine upon sixpence worth of herring."—R. T. S.

4, 5. (4) Labor .. rich, i.e. do not weary thyself in making riches the great end of thy labor.[a] cease .. wisdom, if that sets riches in so high a place. (5) set thine eyes, lit. "shall thine eyes fly." they fly away, the transitory character of earthly riches makes them unsuitable as the chief object of our regard and pursuit.

Laboring to be Rich Leads to the Neglect of the Nobler Pursuits of Life.—1. Mind-culture. It might be better to be more poor and to have time for reading, music, meditation. 2. Social intercourse. Buried in business, the fierce toiler after money has no leisure or heart for cultivating the friendship of his neighbors. 3. The service of God. "Life is more than meat;" "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

gence came literally to stand before the King of England. But he has, by his invention of the printing press, stood before kings and princes from that hour to this, for they have all learned to honor his name, and to acknowledge their obligations to him." — Hom. Com.

[a] Lit. owner of appetite.

The Latins call luxury gula, the throat.

"The Arab proverb says, 'He who sups with the sultan burns his lips.' Horace says that kings are said to press dainties and wine upon those whom they desire to scrutinize and test, as to whether they be worthy of friendship. The caution is therefore one dictated by prudence. And in general it may be thus understood: Beware of going to places and frequenting society where watchfulness and prudence are likely to be overborne." — Pul. Com.

"Dr. Kitto tells us that, in the East, men eat an almost incredible amount of food when a rare opportunity offers itself." — Pul. Com.

[a] 1 Ti. vi. 9, 10. "Only those who do not trust in riches can really enjoy their possession, or escape bitter sorrow in their loss."

"Wealth is like a bird; it hops all day from man to man, as that doth from tree to tree; and none can say where it will roost or rest at night."—Adams.

"It were a most strange folly to fall passionately in love with a bird upon the wing. . . How much better were it, since riches will fly, for thyself to direct their flight towards heaven, by relieving the necessitous servants and members of Jesus Christ." — Bp. Hopkins.

Laboring to be rich too often means working for self and toiling for earth.—Pul. Com.

Bearing the Loss of Wealth.—We have a remarkable instance of equanimity, in a French nobleman, who was reduced from splendid affluence to poverty by the Revolution which desolated that fine country. The Duke de Laincourt was constrained, like many others, to emigrate on account of the horrors of the French Revolution, and leave his paternal abode and inheritance. When in New York, he was reduced to the necessity of living without a servant, though formerly possessed of an income of more than £100,000 sterling annually. This great reverse he bore with great equanimity, and when brushing his own clothes, or doing other services which had formerly been the work of others, he would observe with a cheerful countenance, "Had it not been for the Revolution in France, I should never have known how easy it is to wait on oneself." How truly relieving to the Christian mind, to meet with a speck so brilliant as the above is in a scene so dark and appalling as was that of the French Revolution!—Whitecross.

6—8. (6) evil eye, simply in the sense of being "hard, grudging, envious,"[b] comp. ch. xxii. 9. (7) thinketh in his heart, R. V. marg. "as one that reckoneth;" i.e. you cannot really judge by his kind speeches, for in his heart he grudges you what you eat. (8) morsel, etc., disgusted when you find out his true character, you will be sorry to have eaten his food. sweet words, with wh. thou didst thank the man for his supposed good will to you: or those with wh. the host invited and pleased the guest.

[b] De. xv.9; Mat. xx. 15.

"Greed is sometimes the acting motive of the feast-maker. These men make feasts for clients and customers. They often do fine strokes of business at their dinner table, in the presence of steaming viands and sparkling glasses." —Dav. Thomas.

"No man who has any self respect whatever will wish to take a crust from the man who counts what he gives his friends. Better to go entirely without than to have abundance at the cost of our own self respect."

"A member of the Grammont family one day found Cardinal Richelieu employed in jumping, and, with all the cunning flattery of a Frenchman and a courtier, offered to jump against him. He suffered the man of political power to jump higher, and soon after found himself rewarded with a lucrative office."—E. L. Magoon.

The Evil Eye.—Whether the same ideas are to be attached to the expression "evil eye," as used by Solomon, and as understood by the Egyptians, may not be easily ascertained, though perhaps worthy of consideration. Pococke says of the Egyptians, that "they have a great notion of the magic art, have books about it, and think there is much virtue in talismans and charms; but particularly are strongly possessed with an opinion of the evil eye. When a child is commended, except you give it some blessing, if they are not very well assured of your good will, they use charms against the evil eye; and particularly when they think any ill success attends them on account of an evil eye, they throw salt into the fire."—Burder.—Many references are made in the Scriptures to an evil eye. Sometimes they mean anger or envy; but in the passage cited an allusion appears to be made to the malignant influence of an evil eye: "The morsel which thou hast eaten shalt thou vomit up." The kan-nuru, evil-eye, of some people is believed to have a most baneful effect upon whatsoever it shall be fixed. Those who are reputed to have such eyes are always avoided, and none but near relations will invite them to a feast. "Your cattle, your wives, your children, your orchards, your fields, are all in danger from that fellow's eyes. The other day he passed my garden, cast his eye upon my lime-tree, and the fruit has since fallen to the ground. Ay, and worse than that, he caught a look at my child's face, and a large abscess has since appeared." To prevent such eyes from doing any injury to their children, many parents (both Mohammedan and Hindoo) adorn themselves with numerous jewels and jackets of varied colors, to attract the eye from the person to the ornaments.—Roberts.

9—11. (9) fool, always with the idea of being wilfully negligent toward good things, unwilling to receive instruction. On such a one good advice is wasted. (10) landmark, ch. xxii. 28. fatherless, taking undue advantage of their unprotected state. (11) redeemer, or avenger. The family avenger of the fatherless is Jehovah Himself.[a] with, R. V., "against."

[a] Ex. xxii. 22—24; Job xxii. 9, 10.

The family goel, or avenger, was the next of kin. "The longer anything has been received as a truth, the im-

Their Redeemer is Mighty.—From the tenth verse we have cautions which cannot be too earnestly repeated. The Bible is never afraid to repeat its own wisdom. We need repetition, for our memories are treacherous; repetition may not be a mere rehearsal of words, it may be an accumulation of strength, an increased fervor of expression, a growing passion; when words are mechanically or literally repeated the repetition becomes a weariness to the flesh, but when with repeated words we are assured of accumulated earnestness and passion we should take heed to the new pathos and not be wearied by the old words. "Remove not the old landmark; and enter not into the fields of the fatherless: for their redeemer is mighty." They may not have a near kinsman, a goel, one who in the name of the family will redress their wrongs; but they have a Father in heaven, a mighty deliverer, who in due time will avenge them of their adversaries.—Parker.——At present we witness cruel injustice. The poor are oppressed by the strong. Hard-toiling men, women, and children in manufacturing centers are ground into penury by the fierce mill of competition, while ruthless "middle-men" fatten on their ill-paid labor. The few in prosperity revel in luxury that they wring out of the many in penury. God will not permit such cruel wrongs to last for ever. The Redeemer is an Avenger.—Pul. Com.——The word for redeemer signifies the man who was "next of kin," the kinsman on whom, by the law of Moses, it was incumbent as a matter of duty, and with whom too it was a matter of interest, to look after the concerns of his poor relations; with whom lay indeed the avenging of their blood, if in any case their life should, in cruel selfishness, be taken away. Adored be the unsearchable pity, grace, and condescension of Emmanuel! When He could not redeem as God, He became our kinsman, that He might be our Redeemer!—Hom. Com.

12—14. (12) Apply, etc., the usual introduction to a new series of Proverbs. instruction, correction. (13) Withhold, etc., comp. ch. xiii. 24, xix. 18, xxii. 15. not die, he will not be seriously injured physically, and he will be greatly benefited morally. (14) hell, Sheol, the world of the dead; "premature death was regarded as a punishment of sin, as long life was the reward of righteousness."—Pul. Com.

Discipline of Children.—There is a discipline which expresses the utmost kindness. Probably kindness to children is as little understood as any practical duty can be. He is not kind to his child who allows that child to have its own way, to do as it pleases, under the impression that correction would amount to the breaking of the spirit or the wrecking of the will of the child. In every life there must come a point of obedience, surrender, of acknowledgment of the superior: the sooner that conviction is wrought into the mind the better, and when it can be brought to effect by the parent it is better than to have it forced upon the reluctant soul by an outward and overwhelming tyranny. To be taught obedience is to be taught the beginning of the way of life.—Parker.

15—18. (15) my heart, that of an anxious father. even mine, comp. repetition of ch. xxii. 19 (16) reins, fig, for inward feelings,[a] Ps. vii. 9. (17) envy sinners, whose seeming liberty and ephemeral prosperity are attractive to thoughtless young people. fear of the Lord, wh. is a bondage that proves to be the true liberty. (18) an end, R. V., reward;[b] marg., "sequel." expectation, R. V., "hope."

The Constant Fear of God (vs. 17).—I. The duty inculcated. 1. A sense of love to God as our Father; 2. Of duty to Him as our Master; 3. Of responsibility to Him as our Judge. II. The encouragement given us to the performance of it. 1. Peace of conscience; 2. Strength for duty; 3. Glory in eternity.—Simeon.

Religion.—The wheel of a chariot, though it be in motion all the day, and turning about the ground, yet it is but a small part of it that touches the earth at one time; the greatest part is always above it. So the true Christian; though he be all the day busy about earthly affairs, yet it is but his body, his lesser part, that is employed about them; his soul, his affections, which are his greater part, are always above them.—Swinnock.

19—22. (19) guide .. way, the right way, the way of holiness wh. he is marking out. (20) winebibblers, those fond of wine, and freely indulging in it. Not necessarily "drunkards." riotous, etc., R. V., "gluttonous." (21) drowsiness, wh. always follows on much eating and drinking. Men cannot work after heavy feeding. (22) father, who has some claim upon thine attention; ch. i. 8. when .. old, the young are always in danger of scorning the old, as old-fashioned.[a]

Perils of Dissipation.—Gluttony and wine-bibbing. As the stomach is the center of health, so it is also of disease. A wise man said that if one did not care for one's stomach, one was not likely to care for anything. It is equally true that he who cares only or chiefly for the flesh probability of its being found an error becomes ever the greater."

"Never must we forget, that the most ancient landmarks of truth and duty are those which have been fixed here—in the Bible — by the hands of prophets, apostles and evangelists, under the immediate direction of the 'Spirit of the Lord.' " — Hom. Com.

"What man so wise, what earthly wit so rare, as to descry the craft'y, cunning train by which Deceit doth mask in visor fair, and seem like Truth, whose shape she well can feign?" —Spenser.

[a] "The pleasure afforded the teacher by a pupil's progress is a motive to diligence."— Fausset.

"Work for something that will pay, for . . . there is something that shall never be 'cut off.' "—Miller.

[b] Ps. xxxvii. 1—9, 35, 36.

"True dignity abides with him alone who, in the silent hour of inward thought, can still suspect and still revere himself in lowliness of heart." — Wordsworth.

[a] "Adults should revere the parents whom, as children, they obeyed."— Fausset.

"A man grows old by the common use of his faculties; but if he pleases he can travel faster. He can make drafts upon his flesh with wine, and burn faster."

"Wine is like anger; for it makes us strong, blind and impatient, and it leads us wrong; the strength is quickly lost, we feel the error long."—Crabbe.

b Is. lv. 1; Mat. xiii. 45, 46.

c Lat. prov. "Heaven concedes everything to the laborious."

"Our knowledge of the book of God is very varied; it may be very slight or it may be very deep and full. How deep or how full depends on whether or not we will pay the price of this excellent wisdom; the price is that of patient, reverent study."—Pul. Com.

"Truth is not only a man's ornament, but his instrument; it is the great man's glory and the poor man's stock; a man's truth is his livelihood, his recommendation, his letters of credit."—Whichcote.

"Truth is the ground of science, the centre wherein all things repose, and is the type of eternity."—Sir Philip Sydney.

"He that cometh to seek after knowledge, with a mind to scorn and censure, shall be sure to find matter for his humor, but no matter for his instruction."—Bacon.

"Calvin's seal had engraven on it a hand holding a burning heart with the motto, 'I give Thee all; I keep back nothing for myself.'"

"It is reported of Redwald, king of the East Saxons, the first prince of this will make a wreck of everything else. Gluttony has been pointed to as "the source of all our infirmities, the fountain of all our diseases. As a lamp is choked by superabundance of oil, a fire extinguished by excess of fuel, so is the natural heat of the body destroyed by intemperate diet." By slow degrees, and more and more, the habits of self-indulgence undermine the strength of body, still more certainly the vigor of mind, until poverty comes like an armed man.—Johnson.

23. Buy, lit. get. truth, on every subject; but especially the truth of God.[b] "No price is too great to give for its purchase."[c] wisdom, practical knowledge; instruction, moral discipline; understanding, discernment.—Pul. Com.

Truth's Purchase (vs. 23).—I. Every purchaser must have an earnest desire after the heavenly commodity. II. He must diligently frequent the place of sale. III. He must have skill to discover that which is offered to him. IV. He must give the price according to the commodity. V. He must store it up for necessary use. VI. With the knowledge of the truth must be joined obedience to the truth.—Hieron.

Fidelity to the Truth.—When Kossuth, escaping the pursuit of the Cossacks, sought the protection of the Sultan, that monarch offered him safety, wealth, and high military command if he would renounce Christianity and embrace the religion of Mahomet. A refusal of these conditions, for anything he knew to the contrary, would be equivalent to throwing himself upon the sword of Russia, which was whetted for his destruction; and this was his answer:—"Welcome, if need be, the axe or the gibbet, but evil befall the tongue that dares to make me so infamous a proposal." Deliberately to prefer death to the sacrifice of conscience is that kind of Christian integrity enjoined in the command, "Fear not them which kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do; but I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear; fear Him who after He hath killed hath power to cast into hell. Yea, I say unto you, fear Him."—Zwingle.——When Ulric Zwingle, the Swiss Reformer, was revolving certain doubts which had arisen in his mind, and had nearly arrived at the conclusion that he should soon be called upon to attack the Papacy, he proposed to resign a small pension which the Pope had given him. The legate of the pontiff, however, prevailed upon him to retain it, and Zwingle, as he announced his intention of doing so, added, "Do not think that for any money I will suppress a single syllable of the truth." Zwingle's after life was worthy of these words. To be incorruptible by any form of bribe is an essential part of integrity.—Quiver. ——What Shall We Buy?—When the pilgrims were in Vanity Fair, one chanced mockingly to say to them, "What will ye buy?" But they, looking gravely on him, said, "We buy the truth." At that there was occasion taken to despite them the more; some mocking, some taunting, and some calling upon others to smite them. Nevertheless, in spite of all the abuse, these good pilgrims would only buy the truth; and when they bought it, not for any price would they sell it again. Usually, in ordinary merchandise, what we buy we are at liberty to sell; but it is not so here, for the command is express, "Buy the truth, and sell it not." And a most merciful provision it is; for, as one says, "Those who sell the truth sell their own souls with it."—Macdonald.

24—28. (24) wise, wh. may be shown in his seeking after the truth. (25) bare thee, special joy comes to the mother from wise and virtuous children. (26) give me, wisdom pleads as a loving anxious parent; but her pleading represents God's pleading with us all. She is specially anxious to have attention to the advice and warning that immediately succeeds. (27) whore, an abandoned woman, who tempts to sins of sensuality. narrow pit, into wh. if one fall it is almost impossible to get out. (28) as for a prey, R. V., "as a robber," her prey being innocence and virtue. transgressors, treacherous.

Our Father's Claim.—I. God claims nothing less than the heart. 1. Some offer belief of the intellect. It is well to understand truth and to believe in that which is revealed about God. We may give many thoughts to God; but these, without the heart, will not satisfy him. 2. Some offer external service. This is claimed by God, but only as the fruit of a loving heart. Given in hard, mechanical work, without love or devotion, it is worthless in the sight of God. 3. Some offer money, sacrifices, worship. All such things are acceptable only as growing out of the heart. In heartless worshipers these are but mockery, and are rejected by God. 4. God's true children must give their hearts. They must give themselves, their inmost being, their very lives, thoughts, affections, desires.—Pul. Com.

The Heart.—It is said that during the persecution of the Papists by Queen Elizabeth, certain of the wealthy Catholics desired to save their lives by an open compliance with her intolerant laws, though they remained Romanists at heart. To their inquiry for direction it is reported that the Pope of that day replied, "Only let them give me their hearts, and they may for this time do as they are compelled to do." Whether the story is true or not, we may be sure that if the evil one can but keep the heart, he cares little what outward religion is practiced.—Spurgeon.

29—32. (29) Who hath woe,[a] etc., Heb. "Who hath, Oh! who hath, alas!" babbling, R. V., "complaining." wounds, caused by quarrelings of the drunken. redness of eyes, a frequent effect of drinking. It may, however, be the dimness, or confusion of the eye. (30) mixed wine, ch. ix. 2; Is. v. 11. Flavored with spices. They seek highly-flavored wine in the spirit of revelers. (31) red, wh. prob. indicated the presence of spices that increased its stimulating qualities. colour, "sparkleth." moveth, etc.,[b] or goeth down sweetly, with "mellowness." (32) adder, or cockatrice. After consequences to the self-indulgent become terrible and fatal.

Abstinence and Promotion.—When General Grant was in command of the army before Vicksburg, a number of officers were gathered at his headquarters. One of them invited the party to join in a social glass; all but one accepted. He asked to be excused, saying that he "never drank." The hour passed, and each went his way to his respective command. A few days after this the officer who declined to drink received a note from General Grant to report at headquarters. He obeyed the order, and Grant said to him, "You are the officer, I believe, who remarked the other day that you never drank?" The officer modestly answered that he was. "Then," continued the General, "you are the man I have been looking for to take charge of the Commissary Department, and I order that you be detailed to that duty." He served all through the war in that responsible department, and afterwards, when General Grant became President, the officer who never drank was again in request. The President, needing a man on whom he could rely for some important business, gave him the appointment.—Christian Chronicle.—— A Drunkard's Child.—A Sunday-school teacher handed to her scholars little slips of paper on which was printed the question, "What have I to be thankful for?" Among the replies that were given on the following Sunday was the following pathetic sentence, written by a little girl who had learned by bitter processes the painful truths it told: "I am thankful there are no public-houses in heaven."—Bib. Anec.

33—35. (33) eyes .. women, drink excites lust; and the tempters take advantage of the lost self-control of those in drink. perverse things, the talk of the drunken is often very foul. (34) lieth .. sea, a suggestive picture of the inability of the drunken to stand steady. lieth .. mast, in drunken drowsiness knowing no danger wherever he may be put. (35) stricken, etc., an imitation of the maunderings of the drunken man. yet again, drinking habits becoming a constant enticement and slavery.

The Quaker's Advice.—An elderly gentleman, accustomed to "indulge," entered the travelers' room of a tavern where sat a grave Friend by the fire. Lifting a pair of green spectacles upon his forehead, rubbing his inflamed eyes, and calling for brandy and water, he complained to the Friend that "his eyes were getting weaker, and that even spectacles didn't seem to do them any good. "I'll tell thee, friend," replied the Quaker, "what I think. If thou wouldst wear thy spectacles over thy mouth for a few months thine eyes would get well again."——Warning to the Intemperate.—Charles Lamb tells his sad experience, as a warning to young men, in the following language:—"The waters have gone over me. But out of the black depths, could I be heard, I would cry out to all those who have set a foot in the perilous flood. Could the youth to nation that was baptised, that in the same church he had one altar for the Christian religion, another for the heathenish sacrifices. The true believer doth otherwise; he that makes religion his work gives God the whole of his heart, without halting and without halving." — George Swinnock.

[a] "The sharp touch of the satirist reproduces the actual inarticulate utterances of drunkenness." — Spk. Com.

[b] Possibly 'ts foaming, or sparkling, may be meant.

"The sight of a drunkard is a better sermon against that vice than the best that was ever preached upon that subject."—Saville.

"A drunken man is like a drowned man, a fool, and a madman; one draught above heat makes him a fool; the second mads him; and the third drowns him."—Shakespeare.

"He that would avoid the commission of sin must avoid the occasion of sin. If we would not fall down the hill we must beware of coming near the brow of it. Keep thee far from an evil matter. When the wine laughs in thy face then shut thine eyes lest it steal into thine heart. A guest may easily be kept out of the house at first, but if once entertained it is hard to turn him out of doors."—Swinnock.

"Wisdom urges temperance in drinking only as a part of a much larger principle. If temperance in drinking stands alone and unconnected with this larger principle, it is a blessing of a very doubtful kind, so doubtful indeed that the pharisaism, the intolerance, the dogmatism, which are able to subsist with 'Temperance' in the limited sense, have often been the most serious hindrance to temperance in its larger and nobler meaning." —Exp. B.

"As a shadow accompanies those that walk in the sun, so envy is a constant companion of those that excel others. As there is no shadow where there is no sun, so there is no envy where there is no prosperity. As a ship tossed with continual waves, so the envious is always in trouble of mind, repining at the success of others." —Cawdray.

Athanasius once said, "If the world goes against truth, then Athanasius goes against the world, for Jehovah and Athanasius are always a majority."

"The more we know, the greater our thirst for knowledge. The water lily, in the midst of waters, opens its leaves, and expands its petals at the first pattering of showers, and rejoices in the raindrops with a quicker sympathy than the parched shrub in the sandy desert."—Coleridge.

"It is he who has even a little capital to begin with, and who makes good use of it, who whom the flavor of the first wine is delicious as the opening scenes of life, or the entering upon some newly-discovered paradise, look into my desolation and be made to understand what a dreary thing it is when he shall feel himself going down a precipice with open eyes and passive will; to see his destruction, and have no power to stop it, and yet feel it all the way emanating from himself; to see all godliness emptied out of him, and yet not able to forget a time when it was otherwise; to bear about the piteous spectacle of his own ruin; could he see my fevered eye, feverish with the last night's drinking, and feverish looking for to-night's repetition of the folly; could he but feel the body of the death out of which I cry hourly with feebler outcry to be delivered, it were enough to make him dash the sparkling beverage to the earth in all the pride of its mantling temptation."

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FOURTH.

1, 2. (1) envious, etc., Ps. xxxvii. 1, lxxiii. 3. desire . . them, association leads to copartnership. (2) studieth, plotteth, planneth. destruction, R. V., "oppression."

The Villainy and Absurdity of Sin (vs. 1).—I. The villainy of sin. Here is a description of sinners. 1. Their study is destruction; 2. Their speech is mischief. II. The absurdity of sin. 1. Sin envies the most unenviable things; 2. Sin desires the most undesirable things.—Thomas.

Envy of the Wicked Rebuked.—When Socrates was asked what was most troublesome to good men, he replied, "The prosperity of the wicked." Here, then, is a great temptation. It needs an antidote in reason. There is no reason for this envy. They are not truly happy. We look at them from the outside; the dark discontent of the heart is concealed from us. To live in the communion of God, on the other hand, is a secret, a certain, a profound, and all-compensating joy. The enjoyment of the wicked, such as it is, must have its end; while the child of God ends only to begin anew—sinks below the horizon to rise in the power of an endless life.—Pul. Com.

3, 4. (3) an house, put here as a fig. of the family. What applies to the house applies much more to the rearing of a family. established, on sound and good foundations. (4) chambers, material blessings follow on wisdom.

Intelligent Goodness (vss. 3—7).—We shall take wisdom here not only as representing piety, but piety in association with intelligence and skill. I. It is conducive to wealth. II. It is conducive to power. 1. Intelligence apart from piety is power; 2. Piety apart from intelligence is a higher kind of power; 3. Piety associated with intelligence is the highest creature power. III. It is conducive to safety. 1. It takes counsel of the wise; 2. It has power at the gate.—Thomas.

Knowledge is Power.—It is not the force of brute strength, but that of spiritual energy, which in the long run rules the world. The illustration of the text is aptly selected from war, where, if anywhere, brute force might be supposed to prevail. Experience shows that it is not so. The complete failures of men like Hannibal and Napoleon show it in one way. Recent wars have illustrated the truth that it is the deliberate and matured designs of the strategist and far-seeing stateman which command success, rather than the "great battalions" on the side of which Providence was said to be. And in another application, sheer force of intellect is often surpassed and outdone by the steady and constant employment of humbler powers. Strength in any form without prudence is like a giant without eyes. Violence and craft may seem the readiest way to wealth; yet experience shows that prudence and piety lead most surely to desirable prosperity.—Johnson.

5, 6. (5) is strong, lit. is in strength, i. e. rooted and established in it. (6) counsel, etc., R. V., "guidance," comp. ch. xi. 14, xx. 18. safety, R. V. marg., "victory."

Application of Knowledge.—In a dark night, I once saw a feeble lamp struggling to pierce the dense darkness; but the mighty genius of night defied its impotent rays. Near by, I saw another lamp, of the same general pattern, whose light streamed out dazzlingly into the distant darkness. I asked, "Why does this lamp give more light than the other? Is the oil better?" "No." "Does it burn more oil?" "No." "Is the burner better?" "No." "But, surely, it generates more light?" Unexpectedly, the answer was "No." "Why, then, does it emit a light so much more dazzling than the other?" This was the answer: "Do you see behind that bright lamp the polished reflector, which the other has not? That reflector gathers all the divergent rays, and converges and flings them out in one glittering flood of light." Professor Jaques thus illustrates two men equally learned; one having the power of reducing his knowledge to practice, and the other destitute of it.

7—9. (7) Wisdom .. fool,[a] "Wisdom seems to the fool to be an ornamental commodity."—Delitzsch; i. e. a costly and unnecessary appendage, which is not worth the sacrifices entailed by its pursuit. in the gate, when men gather in the usual place of assembly to take counsel in public matters he has nothing to say. (8) mischievous, because he is set upon doing the wrong, which is always injurious and mischievous. (9) thought .. sin, better, "the device of the foolish is sin;" the plans wh. the fool forms are sinful. scorner, or scoffer.

Aspects of Depravity (vss. 8, 9).—Depravity is represented to us in the text as—I. Mischievous in purpose. 1. This is the work of the devil; 2. It is the work to which he inspires all his followers. II. As sinful in thought. 1. Voluntary; 2. Involuntary. III. As abhorrent in character. —Thomas.

A Silent Reproof.—The Rev. Mr. W——, missionary at the Sandwich Islands, a short time before leaving America, took a passage from New York to New Haven. In the evening, a company of fellow-passengers, who were quite profane, gathered round a table on which was the only light burning in the cabin, and soon became deeply engaged in gambling. Mr. W——, after reflecting some time on the best means of reproving them, drew a Bible from his trunk, and politely requested that he might have a seat at the same table, for the purpose of reading. The sight of the Bible at once stopped their swearing; and after gambling in total silence about ten minutes, they all left the table and went upon deck.—Whitecross.

10—12. (10) faint, under trial or temptation: the day of straits. small, or strait; a play on the word. (11) If thou forbear,[b] etc., R. V., "Deliver them that are carried away unto death, and those are ready to be slain see that thou hold back." "Some victims of a miscarriage of justice are about to be dragged away to execution, and the disciple of wisdom is exhorted to use his endeavors to deliver them."—Cheyne. (12) we knew it not, the excuse of neglect, wh. cannot be accepted bec. due inquiry may not have been made. render .. works, "God's retributive justice cannot be avoided by professed ignorance."

The Folly of Vain Excuses (vss. 11, 12).—I. The excuses by which men deceive their own souls, as pleas for the neglect—1. Of religious duties; 2. Of moral duties. II. The folly of resting in them, for God—1. Will judge with truth; 2. Will reward with equity. Let the subject teach us—(1) To be jealous over ourselves with a godly jealousy; (2) To live in the daily expectation of the future judgment.—Simeon.

True Scales.—In the reign of King Charles I., the goldsmiths of London had a custom of weighing several sorts of their precious metals before the Privy Council. On this occasion they made use of scales, poised with such exquisite nicety, that the beam would turn, the master of the company affirmed, at the two-hundredth part of a grain. Noy, the famous attorney-general, replied, "I shall be loth, then, to have all my actions weighed in these scales." "With whom I heartily concur," says the pious Hervey, "in relation to myself; and since the balances of the sanctuary, the balances in God's hand, are infinitely exact, O! what need have we of the merit and righteousness of Christ, to make us acceptable in his sight, and passable in his esteem."

13, 14. (13) honey .. honeycomb, the figs. for food that is specially pleasant and agreeable.[a] Honey was one of the choice productions of Canaan, and it was as healthful and strengthening as it was pleasant. This commonplace serves simply to intro. vs. 14. (14) knowledge of soon leaves far behind the man who has none, or who neglects to invest what he has. And the more this capital grows, the more rapidly and the more easily is it increased. It is this same law which regulates our attainment in the service of Christ." —Phillips Brooks.

[a] "Wisdom is in high places, whose lofty altitudes cannot be scaled by fools." —Wordsworth.

"All thoughts of ill, all evil deeds,
That have their root in thoughts of ill;
Whatever hinders or impedes
The action of the nobler will,
All these must first be trampled down
Beneath our feet, if we would gain,
In the bright fields of fair renown,
The right of eminent domain."
—Longfellow.

[b] "Instead of fainting (and falling short of duty) in the day of adversity, the man is to help others to the uttermost of his power."—Spk. Com.

"The only way to make mankind see the beauty of justice is by showing them the consequence of injustice."—Sydney Smith.

"If, in the days of sunshine and prosperity, we are daily nourishing our faith, our love, our hope, our prayerfulness, by cherishing our union with Jesus Christ our Lord, we shall be strong and we shall not faint." —Clarkson.

[a] Comp. Ps. xix, 10.

"Honey entered largely into the diet of Heb. children (Is. vii. 15), so that it was a natural emblem for the purest and simplest wisdom."—Spk. Com.

[b] Pr. xxiii. 18.

"Honey is found by man ready prepared for his use; no human skill is needed to make it fit for food — nothing that man can do can render it more palatable than it is as it flows from the comb. So the revealed wisdom of God as it is found in the Scriptures needs no intervention of man to make it suitable to human needs."—Hom. Com.

[c] "From the Fall to this hour there has been in the mind of the wicked an aversion to the truly righteous. In every chapter of human history this enmity is revealed." — Dav. Thomas.

[d] Ps. xxxiv. 19.

[e] Job v. 19.

"Think, when you are enraged at any one, what your sentiments would probably become should he die during the dispute."—Shenstone.

[a] Job xxxi. 29; Ps. xxxv. 15; Pr xvii. 5.

Be more glad to see a man's amendment than his punishment.

"There is no subject on which the teaching of the Proverbs more strikingly anticipates the morality of the New Testament than that of forgiveness to our enemies."— Harper.

"He who rejoices in the trouble of another, his own trouble stands behind the door." — Pul. Com.

wisdom, let it be to thy soul as honey to thy palate. reward, lit. "future." expectation, of blessing.[b]

The Sweetness of Divine Wisdom (vss. 13, 14).—As honey is to the bodily appetite, so is wisdom to the soul. I. Under peculiar circumstances. Thus to the traveler honey is a refreshment; so to heaven-bound travelers is wisdom. II. In its associations. Thus Samson's honey would remind him of his previous encounter with the lion; and Divine wisdom sometimes reminds us of the victories of grace. III. In its accumulations. Honey is extracted from a thousand flowers, and carefully stored; so wisdom is drawn from many texts, and lodged in the memory. IV. In its assimilation. Honey must be taken into the body, etc.; wisdom must be mentally digested. V. In its fitness to the palate. Honey is not liked by all, nor is wisdom.

Honey an Emblem of Pleasure.—In this country persons do not "find" honey under circumstances which constitute them its lawful possessors, though they may obtain it by purchase or by bee-nurture. But the caution touches those who do not live in a "land flowing with milk and honey." The honey is unmistakably the representative of pleasure, attainable, we may say, by things lawful in themselves, and only evil when abused. Just as bread sets forth, in figure, the daily comforts of life viewed en masse, so does honey stand for those pleasures an excess of which causes a moral surfeit. The same idea occurs in the writings of some of the pagans of olden time, for we find an ancient philosopher advising his pupils that honey should be eaten with the tip of the finger.

15, 16. (15) against the dwelling,[c] thinking to charge some iniquity upon it, or compass some design against it. (16) falleth, into such calamities as men by wicked devices, or God in His disciplinary providence, may bring upon him. There is no reference here to the good man's falling into sin. The point of the teaching is God's providential care.[d] seven times, a definite put for an indefinite number.[e] Comp. our term, "again and again." There is a marvelous buoyancy in goodness. shall fall, etc., R. V., "are overthrown by calamity," i. e. the trial wh. disciplines the righteous, utterly overthrows the wicked.

A Word to the Wicked Concerning the Good (vs. 15).—I. What is implied in this text? 1. That the wicked can discern goodness; 2. That he is maliciously disposed to destroy the good man; 3. That he is envious of him. II. What is taught in it? 1. That a good man may fall before the machinations of the wicked; 2. That if he recover from the fall, he will still pursue the right way; 3. That the fall of the wicked adds to his disgrace.

17, 18. (17) Rejoice not, "delight in injury is the twin sister to a plotting intrigue and violence."[a] stumbleth, R. V., "when he is overthrown." (18) displease him, Heb. "it be evil in His eyes." turn .. him, the point is not so much the removal of God's displeasure from the enemy as the punishment of the malignant man, either mentally or materially. The moralist warns the disciple against giving way to this unfit rejoicing, lest he prepare for himself bitter mortification by having to witness the restoration of the hated one, or by being himself made to suffer that evil which he had rejoiced to see his neighbor experience.—Pul. Com.

Billy Bray's Parable.—A celebrated local preacher, generally known as Billy Bray, was once preaching with great effect to a large congregation, principally miners. In that neighborhood there were two mines, one very prosperous, the other quite the reverse, for the work was hard and the wages low. He represented himself as working at that mine, but on the "pay-day" going to the prosperous one for his wages. But had he not been at work at the other mine? the manager inquired. He had, but he liked the wages at the good mine the best. He pleaded very earnestly, but in vain. He was dismissed at last with the remark, from which there was no appeal, that he must come there to work if he came there for his wages. And then he turned upon the congregation, and the effect was almost irresistible, that they must serve Christ here if they would share His glory hereafter; but if they would serve the devil now, to him they must go for their wages by-and-by.—The King's Son.

I Forgave.—

My heart was heavy, for its trust had been Abused, its kindness answered with foul wrong;
So turning gloomily from my fellow-men,
One summer Sabbath day I strolled among
The green mounds of the village burying-place;
Where pondering how all human love and hate
Find one sad level; and how, soon or late,
Wronged and wrongdoer, each with meekened face,
And cold hands folded over a still heart,
Pass the green threshold of a common grave,
Whither all footsteps tend, whence none depart,
Awed for myself, and pitying my race,
Our common sorrow, like a mighty wave,
Swept all my pride away, and, trembling, I forgave.

—Whittier.

19, 20. (19) Fret not, etc., as Ps. xxxvii. 1. envious, the undeserved prosperity of wicked men might excite to imitation of their wicked conduct.[a] (20) no reward,[b] Stewart, "no hereafter" of reward such as is described in vs. 14 and xxiii. 18. candle, or lamp, i. e. the family of the wicked shall die out; ch. xiii. 9.[c]

A Common Fault Corrected (vss. 19, 20).—I. The fault defined,—"fret," etc. Men are fretful sometimes when they see the prosperity of the wicked, as compared with the sorrows of the good; they sometimes wish they had some of the good things that fall to others, and excuse their envy by thinking of what in such a case they would do. II. The fault corrected. The wicked shall have no reward for any good he may have done: "they have their reward." "their candle," etc., i. e. the light of their fame, office, power, wealth, life.

Phocion's Dying Charge to his Son.—Phocion was an Athenian, born some four hundred years B. C., and one of the most upright and benevolent heathen that ever lived. Yet he was condemned to die as a criminal, and denied even a grave in the country to which he had devoted his life. What could be more unjust in the Athenians, than putting their public benefactor to death in such a way as this? They sadly repented their madness afterwards, put the accuser to death, and erected a statue to Phocion's memory. But when Phocion had taken the poison which he was condemned to drink, and was about to die, "he charged his son, with his last breath, that he should show no resentment against his persecutors."—Cheever.——Prosperity is Infinitely Inferior to Character.—The great question is not as to what a man has, but as to what he is. It is far more important to be upright and holy in life than to be rich, successful, and happy in one's circumstances. Surely he who values true goodness will feel that it is a pearl of great price—the cost of which would not be compensated for by all the wealth of the Indies. Therefore to envy the prosperity of the wicked is to turn aside from the higher possession which may be enjoyed in poverty and adversity.—Pul. Com.

21, 22. (21) fear .. king, "the verse has been largely used [in England] as a text by preachers who desired to recommend loyalty and to censure disaffection and rebellion. It has been a favorite motto for discourses on the Gunpowder Treason and the execution of Charles I."—Pul. Com. Comp. Ec. viii. 2, x. 20; Pe. ii. 17. given to change,[a] those who oppose the present order, who are revolutionary. (22) suddenly,[b] bec. agitators are dealt with vigorously. To discovered rebels little mercy is shown. of them both, i. e. the punishment which both Jehovah and the king will bring on the rebellious.

Fear God and the King (vs. 21).—I. According to their several relations: God supremely, the king subordinately. II. According to the departments of their rule: "render to Cæsar," etc. III. According to the justness of their administrations. IV. According to the end of life, when God will be everything, and the king a man like thyself.

Change.—Intellectual variety or contention should within proper limits be encouraged, because out of intellectual conflict there may come intellectual light; but men must not have moral variety—that is to say, different definitions of moral obligation; there must not be any inter-

"Burke said of Pitt after his fall, that the manner in which he made his own justification, without impeaching the conduct of his colleagues or taking any measure that might seem to arise from disgust or opposition, set a seal upon his character."—Lecky.

"Revenge, at first though sweet, Bitter ere long back on itself recoils."

[a] Ps. lxxiii. 2, 3; Pr. i. 11.

[b] Lit. "no future."

[c] Job xxi. 17; Ps. xxxvii. 2.

The way of every man is declarative of the end of that man. Men reap as they sow.

"Whosoever thou be that enviest evil men, I cannot tell who should envy thee, except the devil, because thou strivest to be more wicked than he is. For they are only the godly that he is envious against." —Jermin.

"Genius may coexist not long with selfishness, and the indulgence of an envious disposition."—Coleridge

[a] "Lit. alterers; men of fickleness, who cannot be relied on." — Wordsworth.

[b] "Those that are of restless, factious, turbulent spirits, commonly pull mischief upon their own heads ere they are aware." — Mat. Henry.

"Religion and loyalty go together; and the best way to make good subjects to the queen is to make men good servants of God.

They will not make conscience of civil duties who make none of Divine." —Johnson.

fusion of right and wrong, as if there were some things partly morally right and partly morally wrong; the distinction must be vital, deep, unchangeable, otherwise we shall be led into such confusion as shall be used for the purpose of excusing selfishness and delinquency. It would be unworthy of the Bible to exhort its readers to have nothing to do with men who are given to intellectual change, because intellectual change may be indicative of progress; but it is worthy of the Bible to point out that moral distinctions must not be trifled with, and that where a moral course has been vividly indicated in holy writ it should never be regarded as open to the criticism and revision of dissenting minds. Sometimes we may vainly imagine that there is an intellectual force superior to that which is discovered in Biblical literature; but we must never delude ourselves with the idea that there is a morality loftier than the ethics of revelation. We cannot go beyond the purity of the commandments, we cannot transcend the moral lines indicated by the beatitudes; beyond the boundaries of the Sermon on the Mount there is nothing worthy of the name of morality. Intellectual difference may be a sign of vitality, but moral confusion is a sign of moral obliquity.—J. Parker.

23—26. Vss. 23—24 form a second supplement to the great Solomonic collection. (23) These things, etc., R. V., "These also are sayings of the wise." not good, is equivalent to saying "it is very sinful." respect of persons, i. e. so as to allow such respect to pervert judgment. Lit. "to discern faces," so showing partiality.[a] (24) wicked .. righteous, this represents a false judicial decision, wh. justifies the wicked. people curse, R. V., "peoples;" nothing so quickly embitters a people as corruption in the fountains of justice. (25) rebuke, the wicked: judging righteous judgment. good blessing, that of a people who feel secure because justice rules. (26) kiss, etc., R. V., "He kisseth the lips that giveth a right answer:" i. e. He shall gain the hearts of men by answering righteously. An answer that is fair and suitable to the circumstances is as pleasant to the hearers as a kiss on the lips. right answer, lit. plain words; not deceptive, or obscure.

a "If they who employ their labor and travail about the public administration of justice, follow it only as a trade, with unquenchable thirst of gain, being not in heart persuaded that justice is God's own work, and themselves His agents in this business, the sentence of right God's own verdict, and themselves His priests to deliver it, formalities of justice do but serve to smother right, and that which was necessarily ordained for the common good is, through shameful abuse, made the cause of common misery."—Hooker.

Easy Way to Confer Happiness.—"If a civil word or two will render a man happy," said a French king, "he must be wretched indeed who will not give them to him." Were superiors to keep this in view, yea, were all mankind to observe it, how much happier would the world be than what it is! We may say of this disposition, "that it is like lighting another man's candle by one's own, which loses none of its light by what the other gains."—Cheever.

27. without, in the field, etc. The business of life, by wh. the means of subsistence is gained, is conceived of as away from the dwelling-house.[a] "Let those things wh. are obviously most important and necessary be done first." build .. house, either "raise a dwelling," as distinct from a tent in the field; or "found a family," "set up a domestic establishment."[b] a "Take care, by the profitable and diligent prosecution of your labors in the field, first of all for the needful and reliable support of your existence; then you may go on to the building up of your establishment." — O. Zockler.

The Chief Things First (vs. 27).—I. Apply the advice here given to the common things of life. The principal thing is to secure the means of living: the sphere of the spending will follow in due course. A word to young married people who are apt to begin life with too large establishments. II. Apply it to the higher concerns of the soul. "Seek first the kingdom of God," etc.

b Ex. i. 21; De. xxv. 9; Ru. iv. 11.

"It was once said by Solon, 'No man ought to be called a happy man till he dies,' because he does not know what his life is to be; but Christians may always call themselves happy men here. They cannot dwell where God is not householder, warder, and bulwark of salvation." —Spurgeon.

Value of Plan.—In all undertakings it is necessary to consider what is the most important and indispensable element of success, and to make sure of that first. In the building of a house in the literal sense, the first thing to be done is to have a well-considered plan, and to gather and prepare suitable and sufficient materials. If, when the building is half finished, it is found that some great difficulty has been overlooked, or that the materials and the means to procure them are inadequate, failure and disgrace are the result, and all the time and money hitherto spent upon the work is thrown away. So in any other undertaking. If a man desires a certain position in life for which special qualifications are needed, he must first endeavor to know exactly what the requirements are, and then make sure that he is able to fulfill them. If he makes a start without well considering these things he may waste much precious time and energy, and ruin his prospects for life. The same principle may be applied to any philanthropic enterprise. These often fail, because they are entered upon without any just conception of the difficulties to be encountered, or of the resources which will be required to carry them on to a successful issue.—Hom. Com.

28, 29. (28) without cause, gratuitously, without pressing necessity.[a] One of the weaknesses of Eastern people is their readiness to testify, and to testify to anything that may be desired. deceive, better read as interrogative, "Wilt thou deceive with thy lips?"[b] "The deceit is not so much intentional falsehood as misrepresentation arising from haste and inconsiderateness consequent on this unnecessary eagerness to push forward testimony unsought." (29) as .. to me, the expression of the spirit of revenge, or retaliation,[c] ch. xx. 22.

Retaliation (vs. 29).—I. The real spirit of it is one of revenge. II. The pretence is justice. III. The golden rule is, do as you would be done by. IV. Suppose God were to deal with you as you do with one another. V. Forgive, as you hope to be forgiven. See the Lord's parable of the wicked servant, who, being forgiven, forgave not his fellow-servant.

A Murder Prevented.—A minister, traveling by coach to a neighboring village, engaged in conversation with his fellow-travelers. After conversing on a variety of subjects, more or less serious, the subject of revenge was introduced. Every one was anxious to give his opinion. "Not to be avenged is cowardice," said one. "The best revenge," said another, "is to despise one's enemy, and hate him, without doing him any harm." The minister said, "Let us consult, before all, the Word of God;" and opening his Testament, he read the words, "Avenge not yourselves;" "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink;" "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good," Rom. xii. 19—21. From these verses he pointed out how odious and criminal a thing it was to take vengeance. He spoke also of Jesus Christ, and His compassion for sinners. His voice rose by degrees; his words found their way to the heart. Suddenly a young lady, who during the whole of the journey had appeared to be deeply absorbed in thought, rose, drew out a poniard, which was concealed under her gown, and, approaching the minister, said, with much emotion, "Monsieur, you see this blade; it was about to pierce the heart of my husband; I was going to find that faithless one; I was desirous of avenging myself; I have heard you, God be thanked! You have saved two victims;" and, throwing away the dagger, she added, "There is the effect of your words."

30, 31. (30) slothful, Pr. xii. 24. vineyard, more specific description of the field. Vineyards depend for their fruitfulness upon constant care and attention. void of understanding, a fitting description of the slothful man, for he has no wise, sober, thoughtful estimate of the responsibilities of life. (31) thorns, not weeds, as with us.[d] nettles, or brambles. Lit. "what one may not touch." stone wall,[e] wh. defends vineyards from the beasts.

The Fool's Vineyard (vss. 30—32).—I. The scene shows us that if we will not have flowers and fruit we shall certainly have thorns and nettles. We simply cannot do nothing. 1. A man may resolve not to cultivate his mind; 2. A man may resolve not to cultivate his moral nature. II. The scene shows that the sluggard and the fool cannot hide the results of their neglect. 1. We cannot confine the results of a wasted life within our own bounds; 2. This being the case, we have not a right to do with what we call our own as we please. Look around and you will see—1. That the finest possessions may be wasted; 2. That wickedness always moves in the direction of destruction.—Parker.

No Man Liveth to Himself.—The legal right of the slothful man to the possession of the field might be undisputed. The vineyard might have fallen into the hands of the fool by strictly lawful descent. So far, so good. The case is on this side perfectly sound. Yet possession was not followed by cultivation, and possession without cultivation is of necessity diminution. It is not enough to possess; we must increase. Society holds us all as trustees and stewards, and demands an account of our procedure. Is that dog yours? Surely a man may call a dog his own. Nothing of the kind. Society will protest against its starvation or other cruel treatment. Only let society know that even a dog which [a] "Do not speak even truth needlessly against any, and never falsehood." —Fausset.

[b] Comp. Ps. lxxviii. 36.

[c] "The teacher enters his protest against vindictiveness in every form, and thus foreshadows the higher lessons of the Sermon on the Mount." — Spk. Com.

Mat. v. 43—45; Ro. xii. 17.

"If we will needs be our own carvers, and judges in our own cause, we forfeit the benefit of an appeal to God's tribunal." — Mat. Henry.

"In taking revenge a man is but even with his enemy; but in passing it over he is superior. It is the glory of a man to pass by an offence. The man who studies revenge keeps his own wounds green, which otherwise would heal and do well."—Bacon.

[d] "Travelers call attention to the minute accuracy of the description, as illustrated by the fact that, in the richer soils of Palestine, it is thorny shrubs, of which twenty-two kinds are enumerated, that are specially quick to spring up, and overspread a neglected field." — See Hackett, etc.

[e] Is. v. 5.

"All indolence must go down—down in moral fibre, down in moral dignity; all wickedness not only goes down, as if a step at a time, but rolls and plunges down with an infinite and irresistible velocity. All sin forces itself in the direction of perdition." — Parker.

you call your own is cruelly treated, and you will find that society will assert its rights and bring you to punishment. You have not a right to be unclean, to be ignorant, to be careless of life; on that line no rights have ever been established. We have only the right to hold property for the good of others, to hold it for cultivation, to hold it for multiplication, in order that social life may be benefited and strengthened by its appropriation. Coming to examine these things in a practical light, apart altogether from theories and exhortations, we see that we are living in an economy that is self-watchful, self-guarded, and self-avenging. It is a solemn and awful thing to live.—Preacher's Com.

32—34. (32) little sleep, the sluggard's words, comp. ch. vi. 10, 11. (34) one that travelleth, R. V., "robber;" Stuart, "highwayman," whose coming is sudden and unexpected. want, "pressing want," Stuart. armed man, it will seize you as with the grasp of an indignant warrior. From its iron clutch there will be no deliverance."[a]

Nature and Spirit.—1. The analogy of Nature and the human spirit. Both are of God. Both contain principles of life, beauty, and use. Both need cultivation in order to their perfection. In both sloth and neglect are punished by loss and ruin. 2. The personal moral duty. To "awake from sleep," to "stir up the gift within us," to "work out our salvation," to be good husbandmen, good and faithful servants in this garden of the Lord—the soul. If not faithful here, how can it be expected that we shall be faithful in spheres more remote?—Johnson.

Life a Trust.—"The scene clearly shows that the sluggard and the fool cannot hide the results of their neglect. Every man is a living witness to the life which he lives, how secretly soever he may conduct that life. In this case the results were observed and reported. We must see more or less of each other's work. We are in the same world—a small and crowded world it is, too—we belong to one another—we hold mutual rights of inquiry—in short, we cannot hide ourselves from our fellow-men. We cannot confine the results of a wasted life within our own bounds. The drunkard says he injures nobody but himself, than which there is no greater fallacy in all human misthinking. The man deludes himself with the notion that he only is suffering pain of body, wreck of mind, loss of understanding, and forfeiture of property: he little thinks that every child he has will suffer from the outrage of appetite of which he stands convicted. His children will be tainted in health, and will be clouded or dwarfed in mind, in consequence of their father's excesses. The spendthrift says he is only spending his own money; but in this sense of the term no man has any money of his own to spend. Every penny we hold we should hold in a spirit of trusteeship, and our object should be to discover how much good we may do with it; for if we waste it, not only is the money itself gone, but our mental economy is injured, our moral integrity is impaired, our sense of honor has undergone modification or collapse. It is impossible to tell a lie without injuring other people. It is impossible to disobey the laws of cleanliness without affecting the health of society. In the deepest, largest, truest sense, no man liveth unto himself; every breath we draw would seem to affect the atmosphere in which we live."—People's Com.

a "Even the sluggard's garden brought forth fruit — but not for the sluggard's benefit. The diligent man reaped and carried off the only harvest that it bore—a warning." — Arnot.

"Idleness is very dangerous to those that are rich, and feel no want in this life; for, while they give themselves to it, voluptuousness overcomes reason, and they are snared in the deadly traps and deceits of the world, and are poisoned with carnal pleasures and fleshly delights, which are enjoyable for a little while, but at length leave them to shame and confusion." —Cawdray.

"We have all of us a garden, an estate of our own, which God has given us to cultivate — that which is of more value than many thousands of acres of fertile soil, that which no riches can buy— our own true self, our own human spirit. There are all too many who treat this garden, this estate, with careless negligence." —Pul. Com.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-FIFTH.

1. These, etc., the formula indicating a new section; chapters xxv.—xxix; a later selection seems to have been made for definitely moral and religious purposes. copied out,[a] they may have been kept as oral tradition, or in known documents; the expression here means that they gained practical and permanent form. The men of Hezekiah were prob. a learned commission entrusted by the king with the work of recovering, and editing, the ancient national literature.

A Revival of Learning.—The Renaissance preceded the Reformation, and, because it had no deep spiritual basis, it threatened to degenerate into dilletantism and pedantry. But after the second movement had taken hold of Europe, real, solid learning received a powerful impulse, because men were then in earnest in the search for truth. It a "Prob. both the written and the oral tradition were alike sifted for the objects of the collection."—O. Zockler.

"A man of maxims only is like a Cyclops with one eye, and that eye placed in the back of his head."—Coleridge.

would seem that a similar result was produced in the days of Hezekiah. Then there was a religious reformation, and that was followed by a newly-awakened interest in the national literature. Of course, this was the more natural among the Jews, because their national genius was religious, and their literature was the vehicle of their religious ideas. The danger of a time of religious excitement is that it shall be accompanied by attenuated knowledge. But the more the religious feelings are roused, the more reason is there that they should be directed by truth. Revival preachers should be studious men if they wish their work not to be perverted into wrong and false courses through ignorance.—Pul. Com.

2, 3. (2) to conceal, or that He must conceal. God does not hide in order to show His glory; but His glory is so great that it must be incomprehensible.[b] "After the fullest revelation there are secrets unrevealed. honour of kings, as occupying positions of authority and influence; to do all by inquiry and counsel. search out, so that the materials of sound judgment may be before them.[c] (3) heaven, etc., "as you can never rise to the illimitable height of the heavens, as you can never penetrate to the immeasurable depth of the earth, so you can never fathom the heart of a king, can never find out what he really thinks and intends (comp. Job xi. 8)."

Divine Concealments (vs. 2).—I. The Divine Being is accustomed to conceal much—1. In relation to His own nature and the manner of His existence; 2. In relation to the structure and constitution of His works; 3. In relation to the dispensations of His providence; 4. In relation to the economy of grace and redemption. II. In this He acts in a manner worthy of Himself, and suited to display His Glory. 1. Because it is in part the necessary consequence of His infinite superiority to all finite beings in wisdom and understanding—the inevitable result of His being God; 2. Because it evinces His entire independence of the wisdom, counsel, or co-operation of any or all of His creatures; 3. Because such a degree of obscurity as attends the partial manifestation of the Divine will, and the progressive development of the Divine purposes, is eminently adapted to the state, exigency, and condition of man.—G. Brooks.

Concealed Things.—It is the glory of man that he can discover and reveal what his fellow-men are unable to make out. It is the glory of God that he cannot make known to us all that is present to His eye, or such revelation of present good and future blessedness would injure us; that He must hide from us a part of His infinite wisdom, some of His inexhaustible stores, and leave us to search and ascertain, that by our searching we may be "lifted up and strengthened."—Clarkson.

4, 5. (4) dross, or impurities wh. would spoil the consistency and the beauty of the silversmith's workmanship. Fire is the agent used in this process. a vessel, or the proper materials of a vessel.[a] finer, silversmith. (5) wicked, as dross is taken away fr. the silver ore. from before the king, the expression intimates, from his place beside the king, as a king's counsellor. established, made stable, permanent.[b] righteousness, esp. of judicial decisions.

Evil Surroundings (vss. 4, 5).—I. Of the silver, it is the dross with which it is naturally associated; of the king, the mean souls that bask in the royal favor. II. The separation is a fiery process. In the case of kings, private assassination, intrigue, revolution, or legitimate party contests. III. The separation from the dross is beneficial both to the silver and to the king. IV. Men, looking at the silver mixed with the dross, and at the king in the midst of a vile court, are apt to misjudge both the metal and the man: separation is needful to rectify opinion.

Negative Work.—We are here taught not to begin what may be called our final processes until initial processes have been thoroughly accomplished. Always there is a negative work to be done before the positive or constructive work can be wisely and successfully attempted. Take up the weeds from the garden before you plant your flowers; remove the dross before you shape a vessel out of the silver; remove the old building before you lay the new foundations: do all manner of introductory work before you set yourselves with all zeal and determination to build the house or the temple. So with regard to the social vessel: "Take away the wicked from before the king,"—in other words, take "Old Howell has admirably described the ingredients of an exquisite proverb to be sense, shortness, and salt." —Disraeli.

b De. xxix. 29; Ps. xviii. 11; Job xxvi. 14.

c "In God's government we are not to wish to know why, but believe everything; but in the secular kingdom a ruler should know, and ask why, and trust no man in anything!"—Luther.

"When we suppose ourselves to have reached the end, we discover to our surprise and delight that we have but realized the beginning. In God's work there is no end; it is all beginning, all new suggestion, all new and brilliant opportunity." —Parker.

a "As, in order to the production of a beautiful vessel, such as the finer would approve and command, the material of wh. the vessel is to be made must be purged of its alloy, so, in order to the general government of a prince being of a nature to prove conducive to the benefit of his people, and the stability of his throne, the wicked must be removed from his presence, and fr. all intimacy with his life and counsels."—Quoted by Dav. Thomas.

b "God will bless his government, the people will become pliable to it, and so it will prove durable." —Matt. Henry.

away the dross, take away everything that is of the nature of alloy, destroy all evil counsels; and then the throne of the king shall be established in righteousness, and being established in righteousness it shall be permanently established. Only righteousness is eternal in its duration. That which is wicked has in it the principle of decay, and only time is required to bring that principle to its final issue. Righteousness feeds, as it were, upon eternal resources; it draws its supplies from every attribute of God; it lives to do good; it is more than mere uprightness, rectitude, or stern virtue; it is pureness, kindness, holiness, charity; it belongs to the very throne of heaven.—Parker.

6, 7. (6) Put .. thyself, Heb. set not out thy glory.[c] Reproof of over-forwardness, self-assertion, and boastful ambition. stand .. great, i. e. assuming that you are as great as they.[d] Be humble. (7) Come up hither, comp. Lu. xiv. 8—11.[e] eyes have seen, into whose presence thou hast officiously gained admittance.[f]

Obtrusiveness (vss. 6, 7).—I. To force oneself upon the notice of great men betrays a want of self-respect. II. It is the true mark of a sycophant. III. The man of worth will be recognized in due time, and elevated according to his merits; if not, the loss will be that of others. IV. Those who have not the eyes to perceive worth have not the will or the heart to reward it.

Self-respect.—As the Arabic proverb finely says, "Sit in thy place, and no man can make thee rise." "All that good manners demand," says a great writer, "is composure and self-content." We may add to this "an equal willingness to allow the social claims of others as to rely upon our own." Self-respect is complemented by deference. We need a ready perception of worth, and beauty in our companions. If it is folly to refuse respect to admitted external rank, much more to the native rank of the soul.—Johnson.——Modesty.—Men who consult their happiness and reputation are not so anxious to rise in the world as they are to qualify themselves for rising. A wise man knows well that it is not merely the position he occupies which raises him in the estimation of others, but the ability which he shows to fill the post, and the fitness which men recognize as existing between him and his high place. He has no desire to step into a position which he could not fill with some credit to himself and advantage to others, knowing well that he would then be like the jackdaw in the peacock's borrowed plumes, an object of derision to all beholders. He would rather occupy a low place with abilities to fill a higher, than be in one which was above his abilities, and he therefore gladly leaves the question of his social advancement in the hands of others.—Hom. Com.

8—10. (8) hastily, i. e. without due consideration and forethought. strive, reference is mainly intended to cases in the law courts, or before the magistrates.[a] what to do, i. e. what humiliating or what terrible thing thou mayest be inspired to do under the stinging anger of defeat. (9) Debate, etc., settle the matter of dispute in private and friendly conference. Try to end the matter amicably. to another, R. V., "the secret of another." This unfortunate ref. to a third party being often the occasion of dispute and difficulty.[b] (10) he that heareth, i. e. any one who hears how treacherous you have been. put thee to shame, R. V., "revile thee." infamy .. away, the stigma of treachery will ever cling to thee.

Quarrelsomeness (vss. 8—10).—I. The quarrelsome man rushes into strife without thinking of the consequences, being borne along by a tempest of passion. II. His passion prevents him from seeing the merits of his neighbor's case or the injustice of his own. III. His passion leads to hastiness of speech, and the revealing of private matters. IV. The result is that the natural justice of even imperfect men declaims against the passionate man.

11, 12. (11) fitly spoken, better trans., in due season: spoken in its appropriate time; one translation is "spoken upon its wheels." apples of gold,[c] allusion is plainly to some familiar and admired kind of ornamentation, whether of sculpture or of table decoration does not appear. pictures, R. V., "baskets;" marg., "filagree work." (12) as an earring, etc., the point of this verse may be thus expressed, "An ear that listens obediently to instruction and reproof[d] is more valuably adorned than that wh. is ornamented with the most costly jewels." "The listening ear is c "Bring not thy glory to view; make not thyself glorious."—Stier.

d "Do not vie with them in apparel, furniture, gardens, housekeeping, or retinue, for that is an affront to them, and will waste thine own estate." — Mat. Henry.

e "Sit not in a place fr. wh. one may bid thee rise up." — Arabic Proverb.

"Ambition is to the mind what the cap is to the falcon, it first blinds us, and then compels us to lower by reason of our blindness."—E. Cook.

f 2 Sa. xiv. 24, 28.

"Pride has a fall, and it is wiser as well as nobler to take the lower place at first in humility, than to take it afterwards with shame."—Spk. Com.

a "Rush not forth soon to quarrel." — Luther.

b "The point may, however, be, Do not talk to others about any secret evils you may hear of. Let the man who first listens to the offence be the man who has given it; drop it into no other ear." — Dav. Thomas.

Mat. xviii. 15.

c "Either real apples of golden color, in a silver net-work basket, or imitations in silver embroidery."— Fausset.

d "If you be reproved for your faults, do not be angry with him who does it, but turn your anger against the better than one hung with gold." an obedient ear, receives the precepts of the wise reprover, and wears them as a valued ornament.

Well-chosen Words (vs. 11).—I. They raise our estimation of the speaker. II. They do good to the hearer. III. They are the utterance of wisdom, tact, sympathy, practical knowledge. IV. For the speaking of them we need a heart under the teaching of the spirit of wisdom, and then "out of the fulness of the heart the mouth will speak."

The Power of a Word; or, Unconscious Influence.—One day a boy was tormenting a kitten, when his little sister said to him with tearful eyes, "Oh, Philip, don't do that; it's God's kitten." The words of the little one were not lost; they were set upon wheels. Many serious thoughts were awakened in his mind regarding the creature he had before considered his own property. "God's kitten—God's creature—for He made it." It was a new idea. The next day, on his way to school, he met one of his companions, beating unmercifully a poor, starved-looking dog. "Don't do that," said Philip, using almost unconsciously his sister's words; "it is God's creature." The boy looked ashamed, and explained that the dog had stolen his breakfast. "Never mind," said Philip, "I will give you mine, which I have in my basket;" and sitting down together, the little boy's anger was soon forgotten. Again had a word unconsciously been set upon wheels. Two passers-by had heard Philip's words,—one a young man in prosperous business in the neighboring town; the other a dirty, ragged being, who, in consequence of his intemperate habits, had been dismissed by his employer, and was now going home, sullen and despairing. "God's creature," said the poor forlorn man, and it was a new idea to him also; "if I, too, belong to God, He will take care of me, though no one else will." Just then he came to a public-house, where he had been in the habit of drowning his miseries, and then staggering home to inflict new ones on his wife and children. He stopped; the temptation was strong, but the new idea was stronger—"I am God's creature;" and he passed on. His wife was astonished to see him sober, and still more when he burst into tears, declared that he was a ruined man, but that he was determined to give up drinking, and trust in God. At that moment a knock was heard at the door, and the gentleman came in to whom we have before alluded. He, too, had been rebuked by the boy's words for the scorn and loathing which he had felt to the miserable object before him. "'God's creature,' therefore entitled to help and pity." He had gone to help the poor man; and all this the result of a little girl's words to her brother.—Miss Brewster.

13, 14. (13) cold .. harvest, not snow-storm in harvest-time, wh. would be anything but pleasant. Reference is to snow brought from the mountains, and used as we use ice, to cool wine, and other drinks.[a] faithful messenger, one whom his master can fully trust.[b] (14) false gift, R. V., "of his gifts falsely." Reference is to one who is ever boasting how much he will do, yet never fulfilling his boast.[c] without rain, wh. the clouds and the wind seemed so plainly to promise.

A Boy's Fidelity.—A lady who had interested herself much on the behalf of some navvies embarking for the seat of war in the Crimea, had purchased four warm knitted vests for them, but had no means of getting them conveyed to the vessel. Says she:—"Beneath a lamp in the street stood a group of boys. Its light fell on a face which seemed to introduce the sort of messenger I desired. The story was told him. 'Now, my boy, we are strangers, and I do not want to know your name, or where you live, nor any clue to either. You might dispose of these vests if you chose. I should never send the police after you. But my confidence in the honor of English boys, which stands so high now, would be broken down.' The boy's eyes flashed under the lamp-light, and, snatching the parcel, he said, 'Trust me, I'm the boy for it,' and off he ran. A note had been enclosed in the parcel to one of the officers with whom I had had some conversation, requesting him to send me one line by post that night, or next morning, to say that the parcel had reached its destined owners. By the last post on Saturday evening came a note from the officer alluded to, to say that about seven o'clock on Wednesday evening a boy had taken a parcel on board, and had requested things for which he has reproved you." — Quoted by Nicholls.

"Sometimes we best give advice to others by giving it to ourselves." —Parker.

"You may tame the wild beast; the conflagration of the American forest will cease when all the timber and the dry wood is consumed; but you cannot arrest the progress of that cruel word which you uttered carelessly yesterday or this morning." — F. W. Robertson.

[a] "The king's summer-palace on Lebanon would make him and his courtiers familiar with a luxury wh. could hardly have been accessible at Jerusalem." — Spk. Com.

[b] Pr. x. 26, xiii. 17, xxii. 21.

[c] "A more contemptible character know I not than the man of a mean and dastardly selfish nature wearing the livery and speaking the language of love, with one hand dropping a farthing into the 'urn of poverty,' and with the other taking a shilling out." — Dav. Thomas.

Be what thou wouldest seem to be.

"Pretension may sit still, but cannot act. Pretension never feignpermission to deliver it to the two men in the presence of the captain of the ship, the chief officer of the corps, and the medical officer. Having discharged his duty, the last sound heard amidst the splashing of his oars, as he left the ship's side, was the shout, 'Tell that 'ere lady that I kept my word, and the jackets was in time.' "

15—17. (15) long forbearing, a "prince" or judge "is led to take a favorable view of an accused person's case when he sees him calm and composed, ready to explain the matter without any undue heat or irritation. Such a bearing presupposes innocence and weighs favorably with the judge." soft tongue, winning, gentle speech.[a] breaketh the bone, fig. for "subdues even the most obstinate resistance." (16) vomit, an over-quantity even of that wh. is sweet and good becomes an offence.[a] (17) withdraw, etc., i. e. do not give even your friend and neighbor so much of your company as may weary him of you.[b] weary, satiated with.

Forbearance and Persuasiveness.—I. Patience without speech is an overcoming power. II. Patience seconded by gentle speech is doubly powerful. III. Those who conquer by forbearance in deed and gentleness in word walk in the Divine footsteps.—Hom. Com.

The Physician and the Drayman.—Dr. P——, a Quaker of Philadelphia, was very kind to the poor. In times of sickness, produced by whatever cause, he was always ready to assist them. His benevolence in such cases extended farther than his gratuitous services as a physician. Of course he was beloved. The streets were frequently somewhat crowded with building materials, so much so as often, at particular places, to prevent two vehicles from passing each other, if the driver of either was disposed to be obstinate. As the doctor was one day proceeding to visit a patient, his progress was impeded by a dray—the driver of which had stopped his horses in one of those narrow passages. After waiting several minutes the doctor requested the drayman to allow him to pass. The latter, who had heard of the former, but did not know him, poured forth a volley of the vilest abuse upon the "straight-coat," and swore that he would not move till he thought proper. "Well, friend," said the doctor, "all I have to observe is this: if thee should get sick, or if thy family should ever be in distress, send for Dr. P——, and he will do all he can to assist thee." The heart of the drayman was subdued by the kindness of the man he had abused; he was ashamed of his conduct, stammered an apology, and then removed the obstruction as speedily as possible.

Satisfaction.—The richest man in Europe was asked, "How does it feel to be a millionaire?" He replied, "It just feels as though you could pay twenty shillings in the pound." That was a man who retained his sanity; who kept his head upon his shoulders and his eyes in his head. But there have been men whose wealth has become their poverty, and whose riches have crushed them into the dust, in which they have spent their whole life. "Now," says God by his providence, "you see what you are, by seeing that sweetness cannot satisfy you, wine cannot inspire you, money cannot enrich you." Why? Because you are born in the image and likeness of God. It is the divinity that stirs within you; you cannot satisfy the divinity within you with honey, or wine, or gaiety. Who can satisfy the hunger of the soul with the grass of the earth? What is the argument? We are more than mortal; we know it though we cannot explain it. What we can explain is, of necessity, finite, and, in all probability, superficial. There is no other answer to the uprising of the soul in its noblest moods.—Parker.——A True Friend.—There is only one house which we cannot too frequently attend; there is only one Friend from whom we need never withdraw; there is only one exercise that never palls upon the man who enjoys it: let us come boldly to the throne of grace, let us pray without ceasing, let us walk with God, let us never withdraw from the light of his countenance.—Parker.

18—20. (18) false witness, comp. Pr. vi. 19, xii. 17, xix. 5, 9, xxi. 28. maul, etc.,[c] a crushing instrument; a club shod with iron. "An instrument used in the rough and bloody warfare of fighting men in old times." sword, etc., comp. Ps. lii. 4, lvii. 5, lxiv. 4, cxx. 4. "There is a kind of climax in the three offensive weapons named—the club bruises, the sword inflicts wounds, the arrow pierces to the heart; and the three may ed an act of real greatness. Pretension never wrote an 'Iliad,' nor drove back Xerxes, nor Christianized the world, nor abolished slavery."—Pul. Com.

[a] Pr. xv. 1; Ec. x. 4; Ja. i. 19.

[a] Over-indulgence in any worldly pleasure issues in a moral sickness and disgust. There is what the French call the ennui that comes out of it, "that awful yawn," says Byron, "which sleep cannot abate."

"Visit seldom and they love thee the more."—Arabic Prov.

"Moderation is enjoyment: temperance is the true delight: self-control is real power. Nothing is done by violence, overreaching, exaggeration: everything that is worth accomplishing can be accomplished by moderation of desire and by moderation of action."—Parker.

[b] After the third day fish and company become distasteful. Be not too intimate with any."—Lat. Prov.

"He that sponges upon a friend loses him."—Eng. Prov.

"Patience is the ballast of the soul, that will keep it from rolling and tumbling in the greatest storm."—Bp. Hopkins.

"Temperance is reason's girdle and passion's bridle, the strength of the soul and the foundation of virtue."—Jeremy Taylor.

[c] Diminutive, mallet.

represent the various baneful effects of false testimony, how it bruises reputation, spoils possessions, deprives of life."—Pul. Com. (19) broken tooth, wh. gives a terrible twinge of pain when used in biting. foot .. joint, sprained, so that every step is an agony. "Treachery annoys as well as deceives." (20) taketh away, better, "layeth aside." nitre,[d] or potash. Some take the Heb. word to mean, "a wound." "To expose incongruities of action is the object here."—Stuart.

The Miseries of False Friendship (vs. 19).—I. Describe the unfaithful man. He is often ready to promise more than you desire, or than he can perform. II. Confidence in him attended with doubt. III. And attended with pain. Like trying to masticate with broken tooth, or walking with a sprained ankle.

Unfaithfulness.—The greatest disaster, in proportion to the number of men engaged, that befell the British arms in the Eastern insurrection, was the direct result of confidence in an unfaithful man. At Arrah-on-the-Ganges three or four hundred soldiers were sent to attack a body of the rebels, and relieve some British residents who were in danger there. A native was employed to ascertain the position of the enemy. In consequence of his report, the men left the river and made a night march into the interior. The messenger was false. The little army fell into an ambush prepared for them in the jungle. Two-thirds of their number were shot down in the dark by unseen foes. The remnant escaped to their ship when the day dawned. As they lay in that fatal valley getting their wounds in the dark, and helplessly wishing for the day, how exquisitely bitter must have been the reflection that a too ready trust in a faithless man had wrought them all this woe.—Arnot.

21, 22. (21) be hungry, Ro. xii. 20.[a] (22) heap coals, etc.,[b] i. e. "As metals are melted by heaping coals upon them, so is the heart softened by kindness." "'Coals of fire' may be a metaphor for the penetrating pain of remorse and repentance. The unmerited kindness which he receives forces upon him the consciousness of his ill-doing, which is accompanied by the sharp pain of regret."

Returning Good for Evil (vss. 21, 22).—I. The duty inculcated. 1. By nature we are inclined to render evil for evil; 2. But religion requires us to render good for evil. II. The encouragement given us to perform it. 1. That we shall overcome the hatred of our enemy; 2. That we shall be rewarded of our God. Apply:—(1) Guard against those reasonings which favor the indulgence of a vindictive spirit; (2) Set the Lord Jesus before you as an example.—C. Simeon.

Treatment of Enemies.—A little girl one day went to her mother to show some fruit that had been given her. "Your friend," said the mother, "has been very kind." "Yes," said the child, "she gave me more than these; but I have given some away." The mother inquired to whom she had given them, when she answered, "I gave them to a girl who pushes me off the path and makes faces at me." On being asked why she gave them to her, she replied, "Because I thought it would make her know that I wish to be kind to her, and she will not, perhaps, be rude and unkind to me again."—Foster.

23, 24. (23) driveth away, R. V., "bringeth forth rain." backbiting,[a] or slandering; R. V., "So doth a backbiting tongue an angry countenance." "When a man discovers that a secret slanderer is working against him, he shows it by his gloomy and angry look, as the sky is dark with clouds when a storm is threatened." (24) better, etc., comp. ch. xxi. 9, 19.

Effect of Slander.—Here is a striking picture. Cunning and slanderous habits beget a dark and gloomy expression on the brow; as a homely German proverb says, "He makes a face like three days' rainy weather." The countenance, rightly read, is the mirror of the soul. Without the candid soul the brow cannot be clear and open. If we look into the mirror, we may see the condemnation which nature (that is, God) stamps upon our evil and unholy moods.—Johnson.——Injury of Backbiting.—Most of you have heard of the Freischutz, and a very instructive opera it is, if you will only keep an eye to the allegory, instead of thinking of the story. A huntsman, to forward his own purposes, seeks the devil and together they cast seven bullets; six of these are to strike wherever the caster wills, but the seventh is to be the devil's, and is to recoil and [d] "Nitre does not mean the salt so called by us saltpetre; but rather an alkaline substance, wh. was used in Judaea for soap."

"If the cable breaks in a calm sea the vessel and the crew may escape serious injury; but if it gives way amid storm and tempest, the consequences are most disastrous. It is hard to find a professed friend failing us when we are sailing in calm waters, but it may then be borne without entirely crushing the spirit. But when such a discovery is first made in the day of trouble, it is enough to break the stoutest heart." — Hom. Com.

[a] Mat. v. 44.

[b] "The fig. is designed to describe rather the deep pangs of repentance wh. one produces within his enemy by rewarding his hatred with benefits, and in the production of wh. the revenge to be taken on him may consist, simply and solely."—O. Zockler.

"Diogenes, to one that asked him how he might be revenged on his enemy, said, 'The only way to gall and fret him effectually is for yourself to appear a good and honest man.' "

[a] A backbiter is a clandestine traducer of character. His speech goes to damage another's reputation behind his back.

"The man's desire is for the woman; but the woman's desire is rarely other than for the desire of the man." —Coleridge.

"A woman's friendship borders more closely on love than man's. Men affect each other in the reflection of noble or friendly acts; while women ask fewer proofs, and more signs and expressions of attachment." — Coleridge.

Slander is a coward's revenge, dissimulation his defence.

"Beware of backsliding. None sink so far into hell as those that come nearest heaven. No plants, if they rot, become more offensive and pernicious than those which once appeared in richest foliage and choicest flowers." — Dav. Thomas.

"Eastern fountains and springs (where the rains are only periodical, and at long intervals) are of no common price. The injury of corrupting them is proportionate."—Bridges.

"Newspapers are the abstract and brief chronicles of the time. To show virtue her own feature, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time his form and pressure." —Shakespeare.

[a] "Searching out honor brings difficulty."—Bertheau.

"The devil never tempts us with more success than when he tempts us with a sight of our good actions."—Bp. Wilson.

[b] "Is it not evident weakness to be able to suffer nothing, to think it strength and greatness of spirit to bear nothing, to be sensible of every touch?" — Abp. Leighton.

strike the caster, who throughout the whole piece is never certain which of them all he is putting into his rifle, and at last is struck down by his own shot. These seven bullets are evil speaking; and when we use the devil's weapons, we get the devil's wages; sooner or later we hurt ourselves by our own efforts, and, what is more, injure our own cause, however good and righteous in itself that cause may be.—Newland.

25, 26. (25) good news, of those so far away that we cannot have personal intercourse with them, and only at long intervals communications fr. them. "The words remind us of the scanty intercourse in the whole world between wanderers and the home they had left."—Spk. Com. (26) falling down, etc., by yielding to the bad influence and persuasions of the wicked, failing where we expected to have steadfastness. troubled, disturbed, so that clearness of the water is lost. corrupt, by admission to it of something foul.

Good News (vs. 25).—Cold water to a thirsty traveler, to a wounded soldier, to a sick child. Good news concerning the prosperity of a friend; concerning the safe arrival of a merchant ship; concerning a victory. Apply the Proverb to the Gospel. I. The far country—heaven. Far on account of—1. Its distance from this world; as a place it is separated from us by a local distance untraversed and unmeasured, but vast; 2. Its remoteness from our apprehensions; it differs so widely from all we have hitherto experienced, that we can conceive of it but dimly, even with the aid of revelation; 3. Our legal and moral disqualifications for inhabiting it. II. The good news—1. Of an answer to man's deepest questionings. There are certain inquiries of a religious import which naturally occur to us as soon as we arrive at the age of reflection; 2. Of a remedy for man's greatest ills—guilt, sin, sorrow; 3. Of a realization of man's highest hopes, the perfection of his being. III. The resemblance. 1. It satisfies a want; 2. It imparts a pleasure; 3. It communicates strength.—G. Brooks.

The Symbolical Suggestion of this Proverb.—Such a proverb as that before us cannot but suggest a reference to the good news which the angels sang at the birth of Christ. 1. This comes from a far country. (1) It comes from heaven. Christ came down from heaven, sent to us by His Father. The highest truth is a revelation. Christianity is a God-given religion. Its great importance rests on its truth as a message from God. (2) Heaven is a far country, while we are in our sin. Though God is locally near, spiritually He is far away. The prodigal has strayed into a far country. Yet even there he is not forgotten. 2. It is good news. (1) It tells of God's love and mercy. (2) It declares Christ's mission to save—His incarnation, ministry, death, and resurrection. (3) It brings to us the offer of free deliverance from all evil and of a heavenly inheritance. (4) It is of universal application. The good news is for all. 3. It is most refreshing. It is "as cold waters to a thirsty soul." (1) It is much needed. The soul of man naturally thirsts for knowledge of the unseen. A deeper need is that of blessedness in union with God. (2) It refreshes. We have not enough truth to clear up all mysteries, but we have enough to invigorate us and cheer us on our way. Not yet the full feast, but refreshing waters on the journey.—Pul. Com.

27, 28. (27) much honey, comp. vs. 16. is not glory,[a] better, "is burdensome." (28) rule .. spirit, ch. xvi. 32.[b] city .. walls, so freely exposed to all enemies.

Too Much of a Good Thing.—A desire for the good opinon of others is right and salutary. As honey is not only a pleasant but a wholesome article of food, so the wish to stand well with our fellow-men is a God-implanted feeling which is very beneficial both to the individual man and to society as a whole. He is a churlish being who does not care what other people think about him, who sets at nought their esteem or their blame, while a right regard to their judgment of us insensibly produces a beneficial influence upon our conduct and temper. But it is a desire which must not rule our life. Just as honey must not be substituted for plainer food, or made the staple article of diet, so a desire for the good opinion of others must not be put before higher motives—must not be made the ruling principle of life. This proverb may be linked with the preceding one to some extent, for the lack of firmness which good men sometimes display in the society and under the influence of worse men than themselves is often due to a desire not to lose their good opinion —not to be thought obstinate, or morose, or conceited. But when any question of right or wrong is at stake the approval or disapproval even of those whose goodwill is most precious to us must be cast aside.—Hom. Com.——The Lack of Self-control.—We need to see what this condition really is. Every man is permitted, in a large measure, to be his own sovereign. No tyrant can invade the secret sanctuary of his thoughts. His ideas, passions, and will are his own. Moreover, God has given to us freedom of will, so that we can give the rein to our passions or restrain them. The inner man is like a city full of life. We are each called upon to keep order in our own cities, and, if we do not respond to the call, the result will be riotous confusion. There are wild beasts within that must be chained and caged, or they will break loose and ravage the streets—murderous propensities that must be shut in a deep dungeon; ugly and vile tendencies to sin that need to be crushed lest they usurp the control of the life. When the will is not fortified and exercised against these evil things, we suffer from lack of self-control.—Pul. Com.

"Self-control is one of the last results of true education. Silence may be mightier than passion."—Parker.

Accustom yourself to self-control in matters of small moment, as a training for those of greater importance.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SIXTH.

1—3. (1) rain in harvest, in Palestine from spring to October there is little or no rain. So harvest rain was regarded as a strange and incongruous thing. Honor paid to a fool is quite as incongruous. (2) bird, "sparrow."[a] curse causeless, unmerited; not having sufficient ground or reason. not come, R. V., "lighteth not." The birds swiftly vanish, so shall the curse be dissipated, it shall not hit the mark. (3) whip, etc., each of these is fitting to its place and use.[b]

Homiletic Hints (vss. 1—3).—Verse 1 suggests a sermon on things out of place; verse 2, things in search of a place; verse 3, things in their right place. The three verses may be combined, and the subject may be on the fitness of things; and the application may be—I. Are we in our right place? II. Has Christ His proper place in our heart and life? III. What are we doing to secure for the Saviour His right place in the world?

The Curse Causeless.—God will not hear a sinful prayer. A curse is a prayer. No one has the power of inflicting direct harm upon his victim by sheer force of malignant words. Only the superstition of magic could suppose any such thing to be possible. A curse is just a prayer for evil to come on the head of the devoted person. But God will not heed such a petition if He disapproves of it. Prayer is not a force that compels God; it is but a petition that seeks His aid, and the response to it is entirely dependent on His will. There is a providence over life. Curses cannot fly about like black-plumed birds of evil, roosting wherever their authors choose. Above the most potent and direful curse of man is the calm, fair, equable government of God. Though the whole human race combined to curse one on whom God smiled, not a shadow of real evil could light on his head. Balaam saw the uselessness of trying to curse a people whom God had blessed (Num. xxiii. 8). Our whole future depends, not on man's opinions, but on God's treatment of us. Yet many men are in an agony of distress when they are visited with the disapproval of society, while they take no steps to secure the favor of God.—Pul. Com.

[a] "As these birds may fly where they will, and nobody cares or is the worse, so here."—Trapp.

"We know that every bird who casts a shadow over our path will presently settle down again—it will find its nest whence it started, and there take up its abode. And so every curse uttered without a cause will return upon the head of him who uttered it—upon him will come the same, or worse, ills than those he has called down upon another. 'Cursing men,' says Trapp, 'are cursed men.' "—Hom. Com.

[b] "The rod is as much needed by fools, and as well suited to them, as whips and bridles are for beasts." —Fausset.

"The more you speak of yourself the more you are likely to lie." — Zimmerman.

4, 5. (4) Answer not, etc.,[c] do not conform yourself to his style of speech: do not bandy words with him, descending to his level. like him, showing the same spirit, as if you approved of it. (5) Answer, etc.,[d] meet him wisely as his own folly deserves, i. e. with reproof or moderation, so that his folly may be clearly shown.

Folly.—I recollect one Sunday afternoon passing by a large village public-house, and it chanced that a little group of street preachers were doing their best to make known the Gospel to the idlers who were sitting on the benches outside. Going up to interest the men in what was being said, I was confronted by the landlord, who was in a state of almost frenzied indignation. He denounced the preachers as hypocrites

[c] Mat. vii. 6.

[d] "The terms in the first instance mean, 'in a foolish manner,' as is manifest from the reason given. In the second instance they mean, 'in the manner wh. his folly requires.' This is also plain from the reason given. A foolish speech and scoundrels, who lived on the honest earnings of those whom he saw around him. Every attempt to bring him to reason, to show that the men in question spent their money on drink and not on the preachers, to secure a patient hearing for the gracious message, was met only with violent abuse directed against myself. The man was precisely what is meant in these verses by a fool, one in whom all spiritual vision was blinded by greed and sensuality, in whom the plainest dictates of common sense and human courtesy were silenced; to answer him in his own vein was the only way of exposing his folly, and yet to answer him in such a way was to come down to his own level. What could be done except to leave him to the judgments which are prepared for scorners and to the stripes which await the back of fools?—Exp. B.

6, 7. (6) hand .. fool, who cannot be trusted. cutteth .. feet, or he might as well have cut off the messenger's feet, for he will not get his message well carried.[a] drinketh damage, the foolish messenger will do or say something wh. will bring mischief upon the sender. (7) legs .. equal,[b] R. V., "hang loose;" they are as useless to him as a parable or a proverb to a fool.

The Fool.—What is true of the private fool is true also of the public fool; that is to say, of the man who preaches a grand gospel, but does so without himself having any vital relation to it, without having turned that gospel into experience and illustrated it by example. Such a man has no right to have the parable of the gospel entrusted to him, and certainly he has no right to entrust it to himself. There is always to be a distinct relation between the speaker and the speech, between the faculty and the use to which it is put. When things are out of place they may become not only worthless but mischievous. Seed is to be sown in the ground; it is not to be thrown into the air, or to be laid upon marble slabs, or to be cast into iron furnaces; in all these instances it would be thrown away. Right words, wise parables, eternal gospels, are not to be entrusted to loose lips, to misdirected faculties, to foolish expositors: great gospels are to be entrusted to great hearts, and it is evermore to be felt that the speaker of the gospel is a man who has himself realized the gospel; where is this harmony between the speaker and the speech the words will be simple, clear, and mighty.—J. Parker.

8—10. (8) bindeth .. sling, the point of comparison is the uselessness of a stone if bound in a sling. (9) a thorn, etc., Stuart, "as a thorn-bush which is elevated in the hand," etc., likely to injure himself or others. (10) great God, this is incorrect; no reference to God is made. R. V., "As an archer that woundeth all, so is he that hireth the fool and he that hireth," etc. Trusting matters of grave moment to men of bad repute, or to any chance comer, will do as much mischief as one who shoots arrows about at random. transgressors, or vagrants; R. V., "them that pass by."

God Rewardeth.—A striking illustration of the folly of counting God out of one's plans for life is given in the course of William M. Tweed, who died in 1878. Here was a man who sought wealth and power, and who for a time seemed successful in their pursuit. Apparently he did not propose to obey God, or to live for a life to come. What he wanted was worldly prosperity. He thought he had it. He went to Congress. He gathered his millions. He controlled the material interests of the metropolis of his country. He openly defied public sentiment and courts of justice in the prosecution of his plans. He was a brilliant and therefore a dangerous example of successful villainy. But the promise of prosperity for even the life that now is, is only to the godly. As William M. Tweed lay dying in a prison-house in the city he once ruled, his confession of bitter disappointment was, "My life has been a failure in everything. There is nothing I am proud of." If any young man wants to come to an end like this, the way to it is simple and plain. "The great God that formed all things both rewardeth the fool and rewardeth transgressors." "The way of the wicked He turneth upside down."—S. S. Times.

11, 12. (11) As a dog, 2 Pe. ii. 22. "The emblem used here is disgust-is not a rule for our imitation; nevertheless our answer must be so framed by it as to meet and repel it."—And. Fuller.

"A word, a look, which at one time would make no impression, at another time wounds the heart."—Sterne.

[a] "When a message is sent by a fool's hands, he makes so many mistakes, careless or wilful, that it is like bidding him go when we have cut off his legs."—Bridges.

[b] "The legs dangle down from a lame man; so is a parable in the mouth of fools."—Wordsworth.

"None but a fool is always right."—Hare.

"When we allow our heart to wax gross, wisdom itself becomes folly in our lips, and truth herself becomes error."—Horton.

He must be a thorough fool who can learn nothing from his own folly.

"A fool with the Scriptures or a judicial maxim oft causes more harm than profit."—Luther.

"Those who love knowledge for its own sake, ought to wish to see its elements made accessible to all, were it only that they may be the more thoroughly examined into, and more effectually developed, receive that ductility and plastic quality which the pressure of minds of all descriptions, constantly molding them to their purpose, can only bestow."—Sir J. Herschel.

ing, but the thing signified is infinitely more so."[a] returneth, "so comes the fool for the second time again with his folly." (12) wise .. conceit, has a blind over-estimate of himself. One who is encased in self-sufficiency.[b] "The self-conceited are taught with more difficulty than the stupid."—Fausset.

The Danger of Conceit (vs. 12).—Consider the text—I. As a general truth. Here we may distinctly note—1. The character described; 2. His hopeless condition. II. With more especial reference to religion. 1. A man that carries his conceit into his religion is indeed in a most deplorable state; 2. The fool, then, is in a more hopeful state than he.—Simeon.

The Power of Habit.—There is a fabulous story of a princess who was shut up in a strong castle, out of which she must make her escape or else be starved to death. Well, the door has been taken away; what is there to hinder her? The bright sun is shining on the forest in which the castle stands, and she joyfully hastens down to the gate, that she may pass it and be free. But stop! in this gate a spider's web in hanging from top to bottom. She sweeps it away in a moment, and is going on, when, behold, another spider's web is before her. It is very easy to sweep that away, too, and she does it. But there is a third, and, when that is removed, a fourth; and so on, again and again; and at last the poor princess sits down and weeps bitterly, and feels that though there is only a spider's web between her and liberty, she shall never be free. Habits are like these spider's webs. Each single act of a habit,—what is easier to be overcome! But it is the constant succession of them, one after the other, which, except by God's special assistance, will, in the long run, overcome us.—Old Jonathan.

13—16. (13) slothful, the most absurd excuse for his idlness, Pr. xxii. 13. (14) As .. door, etc., always moving, yet never moving from its place.[a] "The door turns upon its hinges by others; it does not turn itself. Even so the sluggard."—Stuart. He does not care to get out of his bed, but seems to be hung upon it, as a door upon its hinges.—Henry. (15) hideth his hand,[b] comp. ch. xix. 24. grieveth him, wearies him, puts him to too much trouble. (16) sluggard, another term for the lazy and self-indulgent. wiser, in inventing excuses for his indolence. seven men, i. e. any number of men. "Indolence feeds intellectual vanity." render a reason, or give back an intelligent, wise answer.

Slothfulness.—Sluggishness increases in a man. The spirit of slothfulness is to be fought against as men would fight against a beast of prey: it lulls the senses: it takes away the very strength which it professedly conserves; it destroys the man whom it appears to bless. We are only safe in being faithful, active, devoted to some worthy cause. Every day should have its own plan, every morning should come as a bright opportunity, and every night should find us once more at the altar of praise, thanking God for a day's work well done. It will be difficult for a slothful man to become energetic in middle life. Slothfulness should be early extinguished. We do not act kindly to a child by doing everything for him; on the contrary, we act foolishly and cruelly towards the child himself. Self-help should be one of the earliest lessons taught to children. Every child should be his own servant; every life should learn the great rule of obedience, that it may come gradually and sensibly into the great blessing of rulership. He who cannot serve cannot rule.—Parker. ——Need of Industry in Religion.—"Make one honest effort for your soul's salvation," said a professor of Brown University to young Malcom, then a student in the institution. The student went to his room, and shut himself up with God. The expression, "Make one honest effort," sounded in his ears. He obeyed. He struggled. He cast himself on Christ. He came from that room an altered man. In after years, the preaching of our dear friend Malcom has been blessed with revival influences that have brought scores to the cross, among them, two now in the Presbyterian ministry. "I never can forget that word which was once whispered to me in an inquiry-meeting," said a Christian to his friend. "What word?" "It was the word 'eternity.'" A friend, who was yearning for the salvation of my soul, came up to my pew, and simply whispered "Eternity" in [a] "The wicked man often sickens at his wickedness, and then returns to it again. Thus Pharaoh returned from his momentary conviction; Ahab from his pretended repentance; Herod from his partial amendment." —Dav. Thomas.

"Let every man that would avoid a return to his former iniquity be infinitely careful to avoid every new sin, for it is like a blow to a broken leg, or a burden to a crushed arm. Every little thing disorders the new health, and unfinished recovery." —Jer. Taylor.

[b] "Every man has just as much vanity as he wants understanding."—Pope.

[a] "Turns lazy and stupid like the dyer's nag round in its circle."—Schiller.

[b] "Or rather 'in the dish.' The moral is that a fool loves to have his hand (the organ of work) in the dish, the place of sensual pleasure; but he will not use his hand for any active exertion."—Wordsworth.

"Herodotus alludes incredulously to a race of Scythians or Tartars who were reported to sleep six months continuously in a year."

"God gives sleep to the bad, in order that the good may be undisturbed." —Saadi.

"The idle man is slain by his own indolence. Satan, who goes about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour, is kept out by no locks and finds his victims in their most private retreats."—Pul. Com.

my ear with solemn tenderness, and left me. But that word did not leave me; it drove me to the cross for salvation."—Cuyler.

17. passeth by, on his own business. meddleth with, R. V., "vexeth himself with," allows himself to be enraged with, and so takes part in strife which does not really concern him. taketh .. ears, and so exciteth the dog to bite him.[c]

The Meddler (vs. 17).—I. Describe the meddlesome man. He has a conceited notion of his own practical wisdom; can rectify everything, from the stirring of a fire to the ruling of a nation; interferes with the domestic, social, mental differences of everybody. II. Draw attention to his fate. Like one who takes a dog by the ears, he is sure to be bitten by the strife he meddles with. Application:—Draw a distinction between a mere michievous meddler and a kind-hearted, judicious peacemaker.

18, 19. (18) mad man, one who has no self-control, is insane; Stuart suggests, "a jester," one always employed in silly joking. firebrands, either sparks, or arrows tipped with a burning substance. death, deadly weapons. (19) deceiveth, deals craftily with; tells lies to. in sport, forgetting that to deal with deceit is to deal with an edge tool.[a] "Many a practical jester does the maniac's mischief without the maniac's excuse."

A Practical Joke with a Purpose.—A wealthy farmer, much affected with hypochondria, came to Langenau to consult Michael Scuppach, better known by the appellation of the Mountain Doctor. "I have seven devils in my belly," said he, "no fewer than seven." "There are more than seven," replied the doctor, with the utmost gravity; "if you count them right you will find eight." After questioning the patient concerning his case, he promised to cure him in eight days, during which time he would every morning rid him of one of his troublesome inmates, at the rate of a louis d'or for each. "But," added he, "as the last will be more obstinate and difficult to expel than the others, I shall expect two louis d'ors for him." The farmer agreed to these terms; the bargain was struck, and the doctor impressing upon all present the necessity of secrecy, promised to give the nine louis d'ors to the poor of the parish. The next morning the imaginary demoniac was brought to him, and placed near a kind of machine which he had never seen before, by which means he received an electric shock. The farmer roared out lustily. "There goes one!" said the doctor, with the utmost gravity. Next day the same operation was repeated; the farmer bellowed as before, and the doctor coolly remarked, "Another is off!" In this manner he proceeded to the seventh. When he was preparing to attack the last, Scuppach reminded his patient that he now had need of all his courage, for this was the captain of the gang, who would make a more obstinate resistance than any of the others. The shock was at this time so strong as to extend the demoniac on the floor. "Now they are all gone!" said the doctor, and ordered the farmer to be put to bed. On recovering himself, the latter declared he was completely cured; he paid the nine louis d'ors, with abundance of thanks, and returned in the best spirits to the village. Credible witnesses attest this extraordinary cure, which proves the acuteness of the doctor, as well as the truth of Solomon's proverb, that with the fool we must sometimes talk like a fool.—Percy Anec.

20—22. (20) wood is, for replenishing the fire. tale-bearer, or whisperer, slanderer, who is to strife as wood to fire. (21) coals, Stuart, charcoal;" just as charcoal feeds glowing embers so a man who loves strife will excite a heated contest. contentious, quarrelsome. (22) wounds, R. V., "dainty morsels," ch. xviii. 8. and they go, "yet they go;" they are received with avidity, yet they are like strings in the vitals.[a]

Fuel for Social Fires (vss. 20—22).—I. The fire, how it is produced; rumors; "they say;" first tales exaggerated; mountains and molehills. Of rumor Tennyson says:—

"The parson made it his text that week, and he said likewise,
That a lie which is part a truth is ever the blackest of lies;
That a lie which is all a lie, may be met and fought with outright,
But a lie which is part a truth is a harder matter to fight."

II. The fire, how it is sustained; by the bearing of tales with sundry accretions, up and down; the tell-tale grows like a rolling ball of snow. III. The fire, how it may be extinguished; by insisting on the silence of the c "He that has got a dog by the ears, if he lets him go he flies at him, and if he keeps his hold he has his hands full, and can do nothing else."—Mat. Henry.

a "The teacher cuts off the plea men are so ready to make for themselves when they have hurt their neighbor by their lies, that they 'did not mean mischief,' that they were 'only in fun.'" —Spk. Com.

"We must consider the effect, as well as the intention, of our actions; for, as in the old fable, what is sport to us may be grievous hurt to another." — Johnson.

"He who never relaxes into sportiveness is a wearisome companion; but beware of him who jests at everything!"
—Southey.

"A wide difference is made between 'suffering as a busy-body, and suffering as a Christian!' It is alarming to those who have no adequate sense of the criminality to find the apostle classify the one with 'murderers, and thieves, and evil-doers!'" — Bridges.

a "They destroy the mental peace of him to whom they are uttered, the reputation of him of whom they are uttered, and the social happiness of both." — David Thomas.

Ps. lii. 1—5; Ja. iii. 6.

"Scandal generally takes its rise either from an ill-will to mankind, a private inclination to make ourtalebearer. Tell the talebearer that you shall repeat what he has said, and name him as your authority; let it be understood that what is told you as a great secret shall be no secret with you, and he must take the consequences of the repetition.

23—25. (23) Burning lips, wh. give warm kisses and seem to glow with affection. potsherd .. dross, "a piece of broken earthenware from the furnace, which glitters with the silver drops that stick to it, but is itself contemptible, worthless."—Spk. Com. (24) dissembleth, maketh the show of love. (25) speaketh fair, then judge not by the speech, but by the character. seven, used as the symbol of completeness; meaning, any quantity of abominations.

The Bad Heart.—I. It may be varnished over but is still the bad heart. II. Duplicity is the sign of the bad heart. III. The need of prudence and reserve.—Johnson.

Hypocrisy.—

Neither man nor angel can discern Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks
Invisible, except to God alone.
Oft, though wisdom wakes, suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Resigns her charge, while goodness thinks no ill
Where no ill seems.

26—28. (26) hatred .. deceit, R. V., "Though his hatred cover itself with guile;" the enemy often using fawning words. shall be shewed, or discovered, and disclosed. (27) fall therein, ch. xii. 13; Ps. vii. 16, ix. 17. rolleth a stone, up a height; showing the absolute certainty of the workings of the law of retribution. (28) hateth, its victims.[a]

Flattery (vs. 28).—A flattering mouth worketh ruin. I. By causing the flattered to be puffed up beyond measure. II. By causing others to form too exalted an opinion of him. Apply:—1. Do not flatter; 2. Do not listen to the flatterer; his opinion of the man he flatters must be mean, or he would not use flattering language.

Spreading the Gospel.—An elderly woman residing near Montreal, in Canada, having obtained a Bible, was visited by her priest, who earnestly endeavored to prevail on her to give it up. Finding he could not persuade her to relinquish her treasure, he attempted to induce her to sell it; offering first five, then ten, fifteen, and at last twenty dollars. The good woman, after refusing these offers, at length consented to sell it for twenty-five dollars. The priest agreed, the money was paid, the obnoxious volume was given up, and he departed in triumph. But the old woman set off immediately to Montreal, and with the priest's twenty-five dollars purchased twenty-five new Bibles, for herself and her neighbors. How vain the attempt to stay the progress of Divine truth, and how fully in this case was the proverb of the wise man fulfilled, "He that rolleth a stone, it will return upon him," Prov. xxvi. 27.—R. T. S.

selves esteemed, an ostentation of wit, and vanity of being thought in the secrets of the world; or from a desire of gratifying any of these dispositions of mind in those persons with whom we converse." — Addison.

"Slander lives upon succession; for ever housed when once it gets possession." —Shakespeare.

[a] "He that injures another hates him in proportion to the injury."—Tacitus.

"Envy is a passion actually diabolical in its nature, for it makes war against God Himself; and being incapable in its impotence of clouding His Sovereign Majesty, it attacks Him in the gifts His beneficence has bestowed on man." —Book of the Fathers.

"It is not easy for us to forgive the injuries we receive; but it is far more difficult to forgive the injuries we do." —Lawson.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-SEVENTH.

1. of to-morrow, i. e. of the plans for to-morrow. Remember that they are unexecuted, and many things may happen that will prevent your carrying them through.[b] day .. forth, life is full of surprises; the unexpected is constantly occurring, so the best plannings may be spoiled. It has been paradoxically said that "nothing happens but the unlikely."

Boasting of the Morrow.—I. Its folly. II. Its danger. III. Its sin. IV. Its punishment. V. Its antidote.—Pul. Com.

To-morrow.—What is "to-morrow"? Who can define it? Who can be certain as to its contents, or even as to its duration? Days are not counted by the hours that are within them, but by the work to which those hours are consecrated, or by the pain by which they are made memorable, or by the hopes which shine from them as new glories in life. The true preparation for to-morrow is a wise use of the present. He who prays well to-day shall sing well to-morrow. The only way in which earnest men can provide for to-morrow is by looking well to the im-

[b] Pr. xvi. 9, xix. 21; Lu. xii. 20; Ja. iv. 13—16.

"Do not throw out with proud assurance high soaring schemes for the future." —Elster.

" 'To-morrow,' is the devil's great ally, the very Goliath in whom he trusts for victory. 'Now,' is the stripling whom God sends forth against him."—Arnot.

"This does not forbid preparing for to-morrow, but presuming upon to-morrow."—Matthew Henry.

"No one has had the gods so favorable that he can promise himself a morrow."—Seneca.

a "Not as mother says, but as the neighbors say." — Arabic Prov.

"Whoso praiseth himself will soon find some one to laugh at him."—Syrus.

"Praise is sweet music, but it is never tuneable in thine own mouth; if it come from the mouth of another, it soundeth most tuneably in the ears of all that hear it. Praise is a rich treasure, but it never makes thee rich, unless another tell the sum."—Jermin.

"Flattery is a sort of bad money, to which our vanity gives currency." — La Rochefoucauld.

a Ungoverned passion. The fool being usually conceived as one having no power of self-control.

"Say nothing to any one in a fury, for that is like putting to sea in a storm. Wise men, remembering their own infirmities, bear with those of others."—Quoted by Nicholls.

b "Envy is the daughter of pride, the author of revenge and murder, the beginner of sedition, and the perpetual tormentor of virtue."—Socrates. Ja. iii. 14, 16.

c "Love which from false consideration dissembles, and does not name to one's neighbor his faults even where it should do so."
—O. Zockler.

mediate duty. Rest assured that if we are faithful to-day we shall not be left without comfort to-morrow. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof, and sufficient unto the day is the joy thereof. The Christian has no "to-morrow" as a fear; he has an everlasting to-morrow as to the hope of growth, progress, and advancement in all capability and faculty for divine service. Woe to the man who has so used his yesterday as to have no hope of to-morrow! Blessed be the man who so uses the present as to divest the future of all terrors!—J. Parker.

2, another man, one who can be quite independent; who can have no interested motives in his praise. not .. mouth, "self-praise is no recommendation."[a] "Every one will be forward to run him down that cries himself up. There may be a just occasion for us to vindicate ourselves, but it does not become us to applaud ourselves."

Self-Praise.—I. Self-praise is ill-founded. 1. Possibly it is insincere. 2. Probably it is delusive. II. Self-praise springs from selfishness. 1. It reveals a self-regarding habit. 2. It implies a desire of self-aggrandizement. III. Self-praise provokes jealousy. 1. Its defective authority is perceived. 2. It irritates the vanity of others. IV. Self-praise is contrary to Christian humility. V. Self-praise only aims at what can be better attained without it.—Pul. Com.

God Must Have all the Glory of Grace.—A certain king had a minstrel, and he bade him play before him. It was a day of high feasting; the cups were flowing, and many great guests were assembled. The minstrel laid his fingers among the strings of his harp and woke them all to the sweetest melody, but the hymn was to the glory of himself. It was a celebration of the exploits of song which the bard had himself performed. He had excelled high Howell's harp, and emulated great Llewellyn's lay. In high-sounding strains he sang himself and all his glories. When the feast was over the harper said to the monarch, "Oh, king, give me my guerdon; let the minstrel's mede be paid." And the king said, "Thou hast sung unto thyself; pay thyself; thine own praises were thy theme; be thyself the pay-master." He cried, "Did I not sing sweetly? O, king, give me the gold!" But the king replied, "So much the worse for thy pride, that thou shouldest lavish such sweetness upon thyself." Brethren, even if a man should grow grey-headed in the performance of good works, yet when at the last it is known that he has done it all to himself, his Lord will say, "Thou hast done well enough in the eyes of man, but so much the worse, because thou didst it only to thyself, that thine own praises might be sung and that thine own name might be extolled."—C. H. Spurgeon.

3, 4. (3) stone, etc., lit., "Heaviness is in stone, and weight is in sand." fool's wrath, R. V., "vexation," wh. a fool occasions.[a] (4) Wrath, violent passion. outrageous, or overflowing; makes a man "savage and furious as a beast of prey." envy,[b] R. V., "jealousy." The violent passion in a husband who thinks himself wronged.

Anger and Envy.—Anger in the best sense is the gift of God, and it is no small art to express anger with premeditated terms, and on seasonable occasions. God placed anger among the affections engrafted in nature, gave it a seat, fitted it with instruments, ministered it matter whence it might proceed, provided humors whereby it is nourished. It is to the soul as a nerve to the body. The philosopher calls it the whetstone to fortitude, a spur intended to set forward virtue. But there is a vicious, impetuous, frantic anger, earnest for private and personal grudges; not like a medicine to clear the eye, but to put it out. Anger is a frantic fit, but envy is a consumption. Among all mischiefs it is furnished with one profitable quality—the owner of it takes most hurt. It were well for him that he should dwell alone. It is a pity that he should come into heaven, for to see "one star excel another in glory" would put him again out of his wits. His cure is hard. Two simples may do him good if he could be won to take them—a scruple of content and a dram of charity.—T. Adams.

5, 6. (5) Open rebuke, plain, straightforward censure, even though it requires bravery. secret love,[c] i. e. love wh. never discloses itself by self-sacrifice or generosity and shrinks from reproving, and is willing to let a friend's faults continue rather than speak about them. (6) wounds, given to our feelings by pointing out our faults.[a] deceitful, R. V., "profuse;" an enemy is lavish of his Judas kisses to hide his perfidy and hatred.

The Wounds of a Friend (vs. 6).—I. They are of the most painful. II. They are accompanied with sympathy. III. They are followed by healing words. IV. They manifest to us our weak part of character. V. God is our chief friend;—notice how He wounds the heart by bringing sin to remembrance, but only to heal and save.

Read Thyself.—Reade not books alone, but men and amongst them chiefly thyselfe; if thou find anything questionable there, use the commentary of a severe friende, rather than the glosse of a sweete-lipt flatterer; there is more profit in a distastefull truth, then in deceitfull sweetness."—Enchiridon.

7, 8. (7) loatheth, Heb. "treadeth under foot." The teaching is that indulgence in any sensual pleasure is sure to bring on satiety, while self-restraint increases our capacity for enjoyment. hungry, etc., comp. the Eng. proverb, "Hunger is the best sauce;" and the Ger. prov., "Hunger is the best cook." (8) bird .. nest, a prov. against the restless love of change and travel.[b]

A Bird Wandering From her Nest.—I. How a man may wander from his place. 1. He may leave the work he is suited for. 2. He may forsake his duty. 3. He may depart from God. 4. He may renounce his human status. (1) In descending to that of an animal. (2) In degrading himself to diabolical living. II. How such a man must suffer as a bird that wanders from her nest. 1. He loses peace. 2. He is removed from congenial companionship. 3. He is not able to fulfill his mission. 4. He is exposed to danger.—Pul. Com.

Content.—

Some murmur when their sky is clear
And wholly bright to view,
If one small speck of dark appear
In their great heaven of blue.
And some with thankful love are filled
If but one streak of light,
One ray of God's good mercy, gild
The darkness of their night.

In palaces are hearts that ask,
In discontent and pride,
Why life is such a dreary task,
And all good things denied.
And hearts, in poorest huts, admire
How love has, in their aid—
Love that not ever seems to tire—
Such rich provision made.—Trench.

9, 10. (9) Ointment, etc., things highly esteemed, pleasing, and refreshing. the heart, the organ of perceiving what pleases the senses. by, R. V., "that cometh from." hearty counsel, sincere, faithful, and loving.[a] (10) Thine own friend, one long tried and proved.[b] In the time of trouble such a one will prove better to you than relatives. neighbour .. near, in heart and sympathy. Not even the ties of blood are to be relied upon so firmly in times of calamity as the long-tried family friend.

Old Family Friends (vs. 10).—I. Consider some of our fathers' old friends. 1. The Sabbath; 2. The sanctuary; 3. The Saviour; 4. The Scriptures. II. Consider some reasons for being true to them. 1. Because of what they have done for those who are dear to us; 2. Because of what they promise to do for us; 3. Because of what they have already done for some of us.

"He that wrongs his friend
Wrongs himself more, and ever bears about
A silent court of justice in his breast—
Himself the judge and jury; and himself
The prisoner at the bar, ever condemned:
And that drags down his life: then comes, what comes, hereafter."

"I thank that man as my friend through whose advice I am enabled to wipe off the blemishes of my soul before the appearance of the awful Judge.'"—Gregory I.

a "There cannot be a more worthy improvement of friendship than in a fervent opposition to the sins of those we love."—Bp. Hall.

b "A prov. directed against weariness of one's home, and a restless roving, without quiet domestic tastes."—O. Zockler.

"He whose discontent makes him rashly leave his country, rarely mends his condition." —Bp. Patrick.

1 Co. vii. 24; 1 Th. iv. 11.

"The road to contentment lies not in despising what we have not got. Let us acknowledge all good, all delight, that the world holds, and be content without it. But this we can never do but by possessing the one thing,—without which no one can be content,—the Spirit of the Father."—George Macdonald.

a "Every friend is to the other a sun, and a sunflower also; he attracts and follows."—Richter.

b "Friendship, like certain wines, becomes valuable with years. The old family friend, with whom are associated the touching memories of many loved ones in the dust, his presence is more than sunshine to the soul, his voice richer than any music."—Dav. Thomas.

Friendship.—The best physic for man is man. For friendship is a kind of life to man, without which there is no comfort of a man's life. Friendship is in men a kind of step to God, and by means of love man draweth near to God, when, as from being the friend of man, he is made the friend of God. But as among the Jews there was no oil that did so rejoice the heart as that wherewith the kings were anointed; no perfume that did so delight the soul as that which the priest offered; in like manner as there is no friend so sweet as God, so there is no counsel that doth so glad the soul, so cheer the heart, as that which He giveth in His word, whereby we are made even kings and priests unto him.—Jermin.

11, 12. (11) wise, a word including here all virtue and goodness. The goodness of the children, when grown up, takes all reproach away from their parents.[c] reproacheth me, as having failed in parental duty. (12) prudent, etc., comp. ch. xxii. 3.

A Father's Wish (vs. 11).—I. The nature of the father's desire. That his son may be wise. This from a good father includes wisdom of the highest kind—religion. II. The reason of the father's desire. That he may boldly speak his son's praise to inquirers, that when any reproach him with too much indulgence, he may point to his son as an answer.—Hive.

Duke of Burgundy.—Louis, Duke of Burgundy, was a pattern of filial obedience. It was never necessary to threaten or punish him in order to make him do his duty. A word, or even a look, was sufficient. He was always much grieved when his mother seemed displeased with him, or spoke to him less kindly than usual. On such occasions he would often weep, and say to her, clasping his little hands, "Dear mamma, do not be angry with me; I will do what you please."—R. T. S.——Prudence.—A prudent man looks forward to the consequences of things, and particularly to the consequences of his own conduct. O, how much misery and mischief might be avoided or prevented by attending only to this single principle, for what are most of the calamities we see in the world owing to but this—that men will not look before them? To the want of this wise foresight Moses attributed all the rebellions and enormities of the Jewish people, and therefore breathed forth this ardent prayer on their behalf, "O, that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end."—Mason.

13, 14. (13) Take . . stranger, comp. ch. xx. 16. (14) loud voice, the sign of intensity and extravagance.[a] The person referred to is the flatterer or sycophant.[b] rising early, the sign of zeal and eagerness. counted a curse, bec. men are sure to suspect that he has some sinister motive.

Insincerity in Friendship.—The picture is that of one who indulges in the noisy ostentation of friendship, without having the reality of it at his heart. I. Excess in praise or blame is to be guarded against. Luther shrewdly observes, "He who loudly scolds, praises; and he who excessively praises, scolds. They are not believed because they exaggerate." Language should be used with sobriety and temperance. II. Insincerity is subject to a curse. It is odious to God and to man. One of the constant moral trials of life is in the observance of the golden mean of conduct in social relations—to be agreeable without flattery, and sincere without rudeness. Here, as ever, we must walk in the bright light of our Saviour's example, the All-loving, yet the All-faithful.—Johnson.

The Flatterer.—It is an excellent description of a notorious flatterer, and a just denunciation of his due reward. First, he blesseth with a loud voice, as if he wanted breath and sides to set out the praises of his friend, and as if he would not only awaken him with the news of it but many others also with the loudness of it. Secondly, he doth it rising early, as if it were some main and principal business which he had to do, and wherein he would show himself more forward than any others. Thirdly, he doth it in the morning, as if he would bless his friend before he blessed God, or rather would make him his God by offering his sacrifice of praise unto him.—Jermin.

15, 16. (15) dropping, etc., comp. ch. xix. 13. rainy day, or more pointedly, a day of violent showers. (16) hideth her, i. e. the quarrelsome wife. R. V., "restrain," endeavors to keep her temper within limits. It is just as rational to undertake to govern the wind. ointment,[a] etc., R. V., "his right hand encountereth oil." She slips from him like oil.

"A brother, if he be worthy, is the readiest and nearest to be a friend; but till he be so, he is but the twilight of the day, and but the blossom to the fairest fruit of Paradise. A brother does not always make a friend, but a friend ever makes a brother, and more."—J. Taylor.

"If aid is wanted, neighbors come ungirt, but relations stay to tuck up their robes."—Hesiod.

c "The uprightness of the scholar will be the truest answer to all the attacks on the character or teaching of the master."—Spk. Com.

a "Clamorous and hasty professions of affection are to be distrusted. They may have the sound of benedictions in the morning, but often they are soon turned into cursing."—Wordsworth.

b "Of all wild beasts, preserve me from a flatterer."—Johnson.

"Good-nature is a disposition to please, and is compounded of kindness, forbearance, forgiveness, and self-denial."—C. Buck.

a "However he may attempt to conceal the domestic troubles which arise from the contentions of his wife, yet they proclaim themselves, as the ointment of his right hand betrays itself by its scent."—Wordsworth.

The Quarrelsome Wife.—She is compared to the continual dropping of a shower; and the attempt to restrain her is like seeking to fetter the wind or to grasp at oil. I. The monotony of ill temper. It persists in one mood, and dyes all it touches with one color, and that a dismal one. II. The corroding effect upon others' minds. Fine tempers cannot resist this perpetual wear and tear; the most buoyant spirits may be in time depressed by this dead weight. III. The inflexibility of ill temper. Alas! it is one of those things we are tempted to say cannot be mended. Nothing indeed but that Divine grace which can turn the winter of the soul into summer is able to remedy this ill. In reliance upon this, the exhortation may be given, "Purge out the old leaven!"—Johnson.

17, 18. (17) iron, lit. "iron to iron maketh sharp." sharpeneth . . friend, some think the meaning is, "one enrages, provokes the other." But the best commentators understand the maxim to say that intercourse with other men influences the manner, appearance, deportment, and character of a man, sharpens his wits, controls his conduct, and brightens his very face.—Pul. Com. the countenance, wh. is the revealer of the soul. (18) keepeth, i. e. patiently and perseveringly watcheth and tendeth. "Diligence secures its reward, even for the humble servant."

Renewal of friendship (vs. 17).—I. A friend separated from his friend grows dull; so iron becomes dull of edge when kept from sharpening process. II. As iron becomes bright and sharp by friction, so the meeting of friends tends to sharpen and polish the understanding and refresh the heart. III. There is a Friend with whom communion is better than with any earthly friend.

The Advantages of Society.—We have ancient authority for the idea that it is not good for man to be alone (Gen. ii. 18). Man is naturally a gregarious being. Though some people are more sociable than others, no one can be healthy in perpetual solitude. The isolation of the hermit engendered the wildest hallucinations of fanaticism together with the narrowest conception of the world. Prisoners of the Bastille, in solitary confinement, were reduced to a condition of semi-idiocy. Robinson Crusoe made the best of his situation, yet he could not live without the companionship of animal pets, and he was glad of the humble friendship of a poor savage. Even Wordsworth was thought by some to have deteriorated mentally in his comparative seclusion at Rydal Mount, and yet there were other men of high mental power in his neighborhood. Men's thoughts are stimulated and sharpened by conversation. Empty society of mere pleasure-seekers only dissipates a man's powers in frivolity. But the society of earnest men stimulates by sympathy, emulation, and encouragement. He is able to see how other men think and feel. They may not all have greater advantages than he possesses; but at least they are differently constituted and situated from himself. Thus he is lifted out of the narrowness of his own single vision. Such breadth gives strength when it is accompanied by an earnest love of truth and right.—Pul. Com.

19, 20. (19) As . . face, "As we see our own face when we look on the mirror-like surface of the water, so in every heart of man we may see our own likeness. In spite of all diversities we come upon the common human nature in wh. we all alike share."—Spk. Com. Or, "A man molds society by his own behavior. A parent will find himself reflected in his children; an instructor will find himself reflected in his scholars," etc.—Wordsworth. (20) Hell . . full, R. V., "Shoel and Abaddon are never satisfied." eyes of man, what Jno. calls the "lust of the eyes;" sensuous gratification whets its appetite by what it feeds upon; comp. Ec. i. 8.[a]

The Hearts of Men Alike (vs. 19).—I. Explain this assertion. It is taken for granted that there is a parity—1. Of age; 2. In character; 3. In condition. Taking the assertion of Solomon in this qualified sense, we proceed to—II. Confirm it. 1. This similarity will be found in all; 2. Whilst in an unenlightened state; 3. When awakened to a sense of their perishing condition; 4. When truly converted to the faith of Christ. Apply:—This subject is not one of curious speculation; but of real use, of most important use—(1) For our humiliation; (2) For our consolation; (3) For our encouragement.—Simeon.

True Friendship.—In the heart of our friend we see our own charac-

"Those that are froward and brawling will proclaim their own shame, even when their friends, in kindness to them, would cover it." —Mat. Henry.

"Iron sharpeneth iron by removing the rust wh. has been contracted from their lying apart; so intercourse between friend and friend rubs down the prejudices which they have contracted in their separate state." —Ed. Irving.

"In the collision of minds the man brings his own thoughts to light, and whets his wits against a stone that cuts not."—Bacon.

"Companionship is that which teaches mortals everything." — Euripdes, Androm.

"You may take sarza to open the liver, steel to open the spleen, flower of sulphur for the lungs, castoreum for the brain; but no receipt openeth the heart but a true friend." — Ld. Bacon.

[a] Men's cupidity is insatiable as the grave.

"The heart must be made a temple to God, wherein sacrifices do ascend: but that they may be accepted it must be purged of idols, nothing left in any corner, though never so secret, to stir the jealousy of our God, who sees thro' all. Oh, happy that heart that is, as Jacob's house, purged; in which no more idols are to be found, but the holy God dwelling there alone as in His holy temple."—Leighton.

ter reflected just as gazing into a still pool we see the reflection of our own face. It is in the frank and sympathetic intercourse of friendship that we really get to know ourselves, and to realize what is in us. We unfold to one another, we discover our similarities and mark our differences. Points which remained unobserved in our own hearts are immediately detected and understood when we see them also in our friends; faculties which remained unused are brought into play to supplement the discovered defects in our friend's nature. We hardly guess what a fund of happy humor is in us until we are encouraged to display it by observing how its flashes light up the face we love. Our capacities of sympathy and tenderness remain undeveloped until we wish eagerly to comfort our friend in a sudden sorrow. In a true friendship we find that we are living a life which is doubled in all its faculties of enjoyment and of service; we quite shudder to think what cold, apathetic, undeveloped creatures we should have been but for that genial touch which unfolded us, and warmed our hearts into genuine feeling while it brought our minds into active play.—Exp. B.

21, 22. (21) so .. praise, R. V., "So is a man tried by his praise;" i. e. "let him purify it from all the alloy of flattery and baseness with wh. it is too probably mixed up." As the crucible brings all impurities to the surface, so public opinion drags forth all that is bad in a man, and he who stands this test is generally esteemed.[a]—Pul. Com. (22) bray .. mortar, or pound him with a pestle in a mortar:[b] a most thorough and efficient operation for wheat, and such things. It is a figure of the severest afflictions and testings: and even such are useless to the obstinate fool.[c]

The Jewish and the Christian Thought of Man:—I. the Jewish conception of man. It involved—1. A similarity of nature to that of God Himself. 2. Likeness of character to the Divine. 3. A share in Divine authority. 4. Divine interest and attention. 5. Privilege of approach to the Most High. 6. A sense of man's degradation and misery through sin. The same heart that swelled with loftiest hope and noblest aspiration, as it felt that God was its Father and its King, was the heart that filled with tremor and shame, as it saw the heinousness of its guilt and the depth of its declension. II. the distinctively Christian view. What has Christ added to our thought about ourselves? 1. He has led us to take the highest view of our spiritual nature. A treasure of absolutely inestimable worth. 2. He has drawn aside the veil from the future, and made that long life and that large world our own. 3. He has taught us to think of our selves as sinners who may have a full restoration to their high estate.—W. Clarkson.

23, 24. (23) diligent..flocks, the farmer's eye needs to be on everything every day. (24) riches..ever, they can only be preserved by constant care and wise tending. the crown, not even royal authority is secure enough to endure forever, how much less the agriculturist's wealth.

Saving in Order to Give.—Two persons who were employed in collecting money for some public charity, knocked at the door of a certain gentleman, intending to solicit his donation. While waiting there, they overheard the master of the house severely reproving his servant for the waste of a small piece of candle. Judging from this appearance of extreme parsimony, that he was a covetous man, one of them proposed that they should lose no more time in waiting there, but go on to another house; the other person, however, thought it best to stay. At length they were introduced, when the gentleman, having read their case, immediately presented them with five guineas. The collectors, so agreeably disappointed, could not conceal their surprise; which being observed by the donor, he desired to know why they expressed so much wonder at the gift. "The reason, sir," said one of them, "is this; we happened to hear you severely blaming your servant for losing an inch of candle, and expected nothing from a person who, we feared, was so parsimonious." "Gentlemen," replied he, "it is true I am very exact in the economy of my affairs; I cannot endure the waste of anything, however small its value; and I do this, that I may save out of a moderate income something to give to God and religion."—Whitecross.

25—27. (25) hay appeareth, R. V., "is carried"; the providential arrangement for the seasons is here presented as an incentive to diligence.[a] Prob. the idea is, "the hay disappeareth, and then the tender grass coma "Or render, 'But man according to his glorying,' i. e. one is judged according to the standard of that of wh. he makes his boast."—O. Zockler.

b "Every family has one of these large stone mortars, and you may hear the sound of the braying at all hours as you walk in the streets of the city." — Thomson.

c "An obstinate man does not hold opinions, they hold him." —Pope.

"Economy is the parent of integrity, of liberty, and of ease, and the beauteous sister of temperance, of cheerfulness, and health; and profuseness is a cruel and crafty demon, that gradually involves her followers in dependence and debts; that is, fetters them with 'irons that enter their souls.' "—Hawksworth.

"I had rather see my courtiers laugh at my avarice, than my people weep at my extravagance." — Louis XII.

a "God's bounty is a great encouragement to our industry."—Lawson.

"It is no small commendation to manage a little well. He is a eth." herbs, etc. "the fodder fr. off the hills is cut and stored." This vs. is the protasis, the following vss. the apodasis. (26) the lambs wh. give their wool. goats, etc. the sale of the bucks will bring enough to buy land. (27) goat's milk, more plentiful of old than milk of cows. The picture of the abundance of material blessings wh. reward the diligent agriculturist.

The Man Diligent in his Business.—He looks after the outgoings of his farm, well aware that there is in all things constant waste, that even the royal crown is a perishable thing. All knowledge is useful, and prudence applies through the whole scale of our being. Let the man, "if he have hands, handle; if eyes, measure and discriminate; let him accept and hive every fact of chemistry, natural history, and economy; the more he has, the less he is willing to spare any one. Time is always bringing the occasions that disclose their value. Some wisdom comes out of every natural and innocent action." To preserve and hold together are as necessary as to gain in every kind of riches.—Pulp. Com.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-EIGHTH.

1. flee .. pursueth, "like one that absconds for debt, who thinks every one he meets a bailiff." "Conscience makes cowards of us all." righteous, right-hearted, who have a "conscience void of offence." bold as a lion,[b] the lion is generally regarded as the type of boldness. The lion is bold bec. confident of his strength, the righteous man is bold bec. he has confidence in Jehovah the source of his strength.. "A man whose conscience is with him can dare the universe."

Moral Cowardice (vs. 1).—This is a fact that may be accounted for on moral grounds. Conscience is the tormentor of the bad man. I. Then the finest faculties of men may become terrible scourges. II. Then no dependence is to be placed on the wicked in the time of danger. III. Then the wicked are always making fools of themselves. IV. Then the wicked cannot bear the judgment of man; how can they endure the vengeance of God? V. Then man may come to be regarded as the enemy of man.—Parker.

Moral Cowardice.—"When I used to go," said a man who formerly lived in sin, "to all kinds of fairs, and revels, and horse-races, I was never happy. As I was coming home through the woods at night, the rustling of a leaf would frighten me; terrified by I knew not what, fleeing when no man pursued, I galloped home as fast as my horse could carry me. Now, if I go to visit a poor dying man, or if I have been enjoying the word of life, I come home in a calm and peaceful frame of mind. I find that the Lord is present with me; and as I walk my horse gently along, I look up and see the bright stars above my head, and am happy in the assurance that the God who made them all is mine in Christ. O, what a mercy!—the loneliness of the wood, the rustling of the leaves, the stillness of night, no longer alarm me. I am, I trust, reconciled to my God, and at peace with Him and my own conscience, through the death of His Son. He that fills the heavens with His glory, and the earth with His mercies, condescends to dwell in, and to comfort, my poor sinful heart."—Whitecross.

2, 3. (2) For, i. e. on account of. transgression, against the laws of God and the statutes of the State, either in sinning or committing crimes. many are the princes, there is constant change of officials and dynasty, and so the restlessness and insecurity of the nation.[a] a man, better in the plural, men, with reference to the wise effort of the people to preserve and to improve the existing order.[b] prolonged, or maintained. Establish order and government by wisely adjusting it, and making it every way efficient and satisfactory. Stuart sees in this last clause a contrast bet. many usurping and unstable dynasties and one righteous ruler: "a sole and intelligent ruler will prolong the life and safety" of his subjects. (3) poor, etc., ref. to some indigent petty ruler or to some tyrant who has risen to his position from low estate by extortion and robbery. no food, bec. it washes out of the ground the seed-corn.

A Poor Man's Worst Oppressor (vs. 3).—Another poor man. I.

good wagoner that can turn in a little room. To live well in abundance is the praise of the estate, not of the person. I will study more how to give a good account of my little, than how to make it more." — Bishop Hall.

Ge. iii. 9, 10.

"Suspicion always haunts the guilty mind; the thief doth fear each bush an officer."
—Shakespeare.

[b] Comp. Ps. xxvii. 1-3; Ac. iv. 13; Ro. i. 15, 16.

"Conscience within a man is one extremity of an electric wire, whose other extremity is fastened to the judgment-seat."
—Arnot.

"Whose anger should he fear who knows that God is propitious to him? that supreme King, the light of whose countenance is life, and who, by one smile, disperses the darkest cloud, and calms the most turbulent tempest."—Abp. Leighton.

[a] "Illus. forcibly in the later history of Rome; or in the troublous times of France. See also the rapid succession of sovereigns in the idolatrous kingdom of Israel.

[b] There are few national governments so bad that they may not better be improved than removed.

"When any of the four pillars of government are mainly shaken or weakened (which are religion, justice, counsel, and treasure), men had need to pray for fair weather."—Bacon.

Who hastens to be rich. II. Who, being in office, tyrannizes over fellow-servants. III. Who betrays his friends, or turns king's evidence. IV. Such conduct is unnatural. Who may be expected with the poor so much as others of the poor who know, by their own experience, the wants and sorrows of poverty? V. Though unnatural, it has often been noted: negro slave-drivers the most unmerciful; see also Ex. ii. 13. Ziba sought the injury of Mephibosheth—Judas betrayed Jesus.

A Sweeping Rain.—This illustrative comparison is here most impressive. It is founded upon a phenomenon which I have frequently seen, and sometimes felt. A small black cloud traverses the sky in the latter part of summer or beginning of autumn, and pours down a flood of rain that sweeps all before it. The Arabs call it sale; we, a water-spout, or the bursting of a cloud. In the neighborhood of Hermon I have witnessed it repeatedly, and was caught in one last year, which in five minutes flooded the whole mountain side, washed away the fallen olives—the food of the poor—overthrew stone walls, etc. Every summer threshing-floor along the line of its march was swept bare of all precious food. . . . And such is the oppression of a poor man that oppresseth the poor. These landlords, and sheiks, and emirs are generally poor, hungry, greedy, remorseless, and they come in successive swarms, each more ravenous than his predecessor. On a gigantic scale, every hungry pasha from the capital is such a sale, sweeping over the distant provinces of the empire. Vast regions, formerly covered with golden harvests in their season, and swarming with people full of food and gladness, are now reduced to frightful deserts by their rapacity.—Thomson's "The Land and the Book."

Thomson cites an Arabic proverb, "May Allah multiply your sheikhs!" as embodying in its intense malediction a constant Oriental experience of fearful calamity.

"God's law is certainly a restraint, but it is such a restraint as the irons which prevent children from getting into the fire."

—Newton.

4, 5. (4) praise the wicked, i. e. when he seems to be successful. They who disregard the law do not estimate actions by their rightness, or their motives. Special reference here seems to be to the successful but unrighteous ruler. contend with them, refusing to praise successful villainy.[c] (5) understand not judgment, i.e. their faculty for distinguishing between good and evil is darkened. "We lose ethical discernment in proportion as we do evil."

c "There have been men in all ages who have had the manly honesty to stand up against the hollowness and the corruptions of their age."—Dav. Thomas.

"It is fearful to sin; more fearful to delight in it; yet more to defend it."

—Bp. Hall.

True Wisdom.—Not only are the good to be blessed with what are known as distinctively spiritual blessings; they are to receive mental illumination, they are to be intellectually strengthened, their natural sagacity is to be enlarged and quickened into a truer and keener penetration—"The meek will he guide in judgment: and the meek will he teach his way." All knowledge does not come through the medium of formal learning, as, for example, by attending school, by reading books, and by passing critical examinations; there is a spiritual genius, a high, keen, responsive sympathy, which overpasses all the mere processes of intellectual acquirement and realizes its results without toilsome labor. We have a right to expect divine inspiration, if we be in Christ, and if our souls be hidden in the Eternal God as in an inviolable refuge. If we live and move and have our being in God, we have a right to expect that every idea will bear the divine stamp, and that every aspiration will be but a return of the divine breathing.—Parker.

6, 7. (6) Better, etc., comp. ch. xix. 1. perverse, etc., lit. "than one who is crooked by double dealing,"[a] Jas. i. 8. be rich, since riches can never make up for the lack of integrity. (7) the law, here prob. with special ref. to wise self-restraints and moral purity, as indicated in next clause. companion, etc., lit. "one who has fellowship with gluttons;"[b] the profligate or waster (ch. xxiii. 21). shameth, ch. xxv. 8.

The Advantage of Uprightness (vs. 6).—It makes the poor who has it better than the rich who lacks it. I. In himself—heart, conscience, hopes. II. In the respect of other men—contemporaries, posterity. III. In the judgment of God. IV. In the great hereafter.

a "One who unskilfully and waywardly passes from one way to another, one who, with divided heart, stands midway between the right path and the by-path of immorality."—O. Zockler.

b The carousing, self-indulgent, extravagant spendthrift.

8, 9. (8) usury . . gain, or "usurious increase," the term including all overreaching and fraudulent efforts to get gain.[c] Excessive interest. for him . . poor, bec. in the long run God's providence will surely direct the proper use of wealth,[d] ch. xiii. 22. (9) turneth . . ear, wilfully resisting instruction and refusing obedience.[e] Here especially defying social and moral rules. his prayer, that offered as religious formality, or that pressed out from him in the time of his distress.

c "Orientals, ancient and modern, have a peculiarly deep and painful experience of the enormities of usury."—O. Zockler.

d "The law of God's government is that ill-gotten gains do not prosper; that after a time they pass into hands that know how to use them better."—Spk. Com.

e Pr. xv. 8, xxi. 27, Jno. iv. 24.

10. causeth . . way,[a] i.e. acteth the tempter, or solicitor. Draws the righteous into the enticements of sensuality and moral evil. own pit, his attempts to destroy the righteous will lead him further and deeper into sin, with all its consequences. in possession, i.e. R. V., "Shall inherit good;" be preserved through the temptation. God will defend His own who put their trust in Him.

Good Things in Possession (vs. 10).—I. Who is the possessor? The righteous, that is—1. The man who tries to do right; 2. And trusts for Divine acceptance in the righteousness of Christ. II. What are the good things in possession? 1. A conscience at peace; 2. Approval of men; 3. Favor of God; 4. A good hope through grace.

11, 12. (11) wise . . conceit, comp. ch. xxvi. 16. The acquisition of riches usually nourishes a peculiar self-confidence. Men are apt to think the skill to get money a proof of extraordinary wisdom.[b] searcheth him, tests whether his wisdom is true or counterfeit.[c] (12) do rejoice, the idea rather is, when they are set in positions of authority and influence; when righteousness (not riches) "triumphs," R. V. great glory, i.e. there is cause for public glorifying and rejoicing. Men have no occasion to hide their joy. wicked rise, into power. a man is hidden,[d] R. V., "men hide themselves;" in order to escape danger to life and property.

Advantages of the Rich and Poor Compared (vs. 11).—I. The poor have really the advantage of the rich in reference to Divine knowledge. 1. They had the advantage in the days of old; 2. They have also the advantage at this day. II. Account for this fact. 1. The rich are more blinded by prejudice; 2. More enslaved by custom; 3. More deluded by conceit. Learn:—(1) Envy not those who are rich in this world; (2) Seek to be rich towards God.—C. Simeon.

Poverty and Riches have their Compensation.—Confidence in riches begins in illusory self-confidence; and there is much to abet and foster it in the opinion of the multitude; for, as the old saying runs, "Rich men have no faults." But the poor man, endued with sense and with religion, sees through these false estimates; knows that the rich feel misfortunes which pass over his own head; that they pay a tax of constant care and anxiety; and that it is ever better to fare hard with good men than to feast with bad.—Pulp. Com.

13, 14. (13) covereth, tries to hide fr. himself, fr. others, and fr. God.[a] Sin may be covered up by denying it, extenuating it, and forgetting it. not prosper, hushing up sin does but increase a man's misery.[b] confesseth, 1 Jno. i. 8—10. forsaketh, wh. gives the proof of the sincerity of the repentance. The truly penitent strive not to fall into sin after confession.[c] (14) feareth, not merely dreads, but cherishes a reverent fear of grieving God.[d] True fear is loving awe, sensitiveness to evil. hardeneth, etc., resisting the softenings and humblings of the near thought of God. mischief, better, "calamity."

Sin Covered and Sin Confessed (vs. 13).—I. The guilt of those who cover their sins, and the misery that awaits them. Men hide their sins —from God, from fellow-men, from themselves. II. The prudence of those who confess and forsake sin, and the happiness awarded. Two ways are indicated by which we may avoid the misery of those who cover their sins—confession and forsaking. Confession is necessary; God demands it. It must be universal, contrite. Sin must be forsaken. This is the touchstone of sincerity.—H. Chatelain.

Sins Forsaken as the Result of Kindness.—A servant of the Rev. Rowland Hill suddenly died, and his master preached his funeral sermon to a numerous audience, in the course of which he mentioned the following anecdote: Many persons present were acquainted with the deceased, and have had it in their power to observe his character and conduct. They can bear witness that I speak the truth when I assert that he has proved himself a perfectly sober, honest, industrious, and religious man, faithfully performing, as far as lay in his power, the duties of his station in life, and serving God with constancy and zeal; yet this very man, this virtuous and pious man, was once a robber on the highway. More than thirty years ago he stopped me on the high-road and demanded my money. Not at all intimidated, I argued with him. I asked him what could induce him to pursue so iniquitous a course of life.

[a] Its ruinous consequences to which the tempter is finally brought.

"A good intention will no more make a truth, than a fair mark will make a good shoot."
—Spurstowe.

[b] "Wealth has a tendency to make the weak-minded and self-indulgent opinionated and oracular. They imagine their mental tastes more refined, their thoughts more elevated, their intelligence more clear and comprehensive than those of other men. Hence they speak with an air of authority." — Dav. Thomas.

[c] "Wealth blunts, poverty sharpens, the critical power of intellect."
—Spk. Com.

[d] "When the ungodly reign, it is the ruin of men." — Vulgate Version.

[a] Ps. xxxii. 3—5.

[b] "While the patient conceals his distemper he cannot expect a cure."
—Mat. Henry.
"To cover the sin which lies on the conscience with a layer of earnest efforts to do right will not take the sin away; the underlying sin will assimilate all the dead works that may be heaped upon it, and the result will be a greater mass of sin."
—Arnot.

[c] "O Saviour! our breasts are too oft shut upon Thee; Thy bosom is ever open to us."—Bp. Hall.

[d] 2 Co. v. 11; Phi. ii. 12.

He that lives without fear shall die without hope.

"A child of God will confess sin in particular; an unsound Christian will confess sin by wholesale." — Watson.

"I have been a coachman, sir," said he, "but am now out of place, and not being able to get a character, can get no employment, and am therefore obliged to resort to this means of gaining a subsistence." I desired him to call upon me; he promised he would, and kept his word. I talked further with him, and offered to take him into my service. He consented, and ever since that period he has served me faithfully, and not me only, but he has faithfully served God. And instead of having finished his life in a public ignominious manner, with a depraved and hardened mind, as he probably soon would have done, he has died in peace, rejoicing in hope, and prepared, we trust, for the society of just men made perfect.

15, 16. (15) roaring lion, who frightens the beasts, and so prepares them to become his easy prey. ranging bear, some prefer ravening, in allusion to the "bloodthirstiness" of this beast; as these beasts crush and devour their prey, so the tyrant consumes his people.[a] (16) wanteth understanding, a king who is weak is practically as mischievous as one who is wicked.[b] covetousness, regarded here as the real root of kingly oppressions.

A Wicked Ruler (vs. 15).—I. His character is delineated by a graphic comparison. 1. Roaring lion—hungry, terrible; 2. Ranging bear—prowling about stealthily in search of prey. II. His victims: the poor, timid, defenceless. III. May be illustrated at this day by the rulers of barbarous countries—Turkey, Burmah, etc., where the poor are helplessly oppressed. IV. Rejoice in that King under whose rule the poor, oppressed, orphan, widow, may trust.

The King.—Where absolute monarchy is not Christship it becomes, as so many familiar passages in the Old Testament show, a tyranny and an oppression, a cause of national corruption and decay. Now this leads us, in the second place, to notice how the actual failure and consequent mischief of the kingship are reflected in the proverbs, and especially those later proverbs which date from the decline and fall of the monarchy. We have only to glance over the books of Samuel and Kings to see what kind of men the occupants of the throne were; few of them show any marked ability, most of them by their folly and stupidity lead their people with hurried strides towards the threatened catastrophe. So far from acting as vicegerents of the Lord, it is their special characteristic that they are the authors of the prevailing religious apostasy. Even the more favorable exceptions, the kings who in the main did what was right in the eyes of the Lord, had not spiritual energy enough to purify the worship and restore the allegiance of their people to the Lord.—Exp. B.

17, 18. (17) violence, etc., taketh the life; committeth murder.[a] The idea is that one who keeps the guilt of blood on his conscience is simply hurrying on his own destruction. flee, in vain fr. remorse, seeking some refuge. pit, sepulchre. stay him, or try to save him.[b] (18) uprightly, note the fig. in this word. His course of life is straight, without a bend in it. saved, better, safe, R. V., "delivered." perverse .. ways, better, "He that walks perversely in two ways, will fall in one of the two."—Wordsworth. Comp. vs. 6. The evil of vacillation is here reproved.[c]

The Murderer's Doom (vs. 17).—I. His crime: murder by whatever means. II. His course: having been guilty of so great a crime, he hurries on with hard heart to destruction. Often his anxious efforts to conceal his crime lead to its detection. III. His isolation: he has no sympathy, no help; all friends even look upon him with horror.

The Murderer.—Even the heathen judged this awful transgressor to be under the Divine vengeance. (Acts xxviii. 4.) The death therefore of the murderer is an imperative obligation. It is miscalled philanthropy that protests against all capital punishments. Shall man pretend to be more merciful than God? Pity is misplaced here. The murderer therefore of his brother is his own murderer.—Bridges.

19, 20. (19) tilleth, etc., see ch. xii. 11. poverty enough, or is surfeited with poverty. Contrast with "plenty of bread." (20) faithful,[d] one who must do right though he keeps poor. haste to be rich,[e] so does not stop to consider the means he uses. innocent, R. V., "unpunished."

"A Faithful Man."—I. His character. Nothing can be more grand than fidelity. When found in a man it is an image of the eternal con-

[a] Ps. vii. 2, xvii. 12.

[b] "Let not the world see fear and sad mistrust govern the motion of a kingly eye." — Shakespeare.

"The itch of getting ends in the sore of keeping"

"They that stand high have many blasts to shake them;
And if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces."
—Shakespeare.

[a] Ge. ix. 6; Ex. xxi. 14.

A man laden with the blood of a soul.

[b] "By the conviction and execution of a murderer humanity is not extinguished, but enlarged; it is individual compassion overcome by a regard to the general good."—Fuller.

[c] "As vacillation rises out of want of the one guiding principle of right, it is contrasted with the straightforwardness of the man that 'walketh uprightly.'"
—Spk. Com.

[d] Pr. xx. 6; 2 Ki. xii. 15, xxii. 7.

[e] "Seek not proud riches, but such as thou mayest get justly, use soberly, distribute cheerfully, and leave contentedly."
—Lord Bacon.

"No man was ever kept out of heaven for his confessed badness; many are for their supposed goodness." — Trapp.

stancy of God; it is like that Divine righteousness which the psalmist compared to the "everlasting hills"—so firm, so enduring, so changeless. It would be well if this grand Old Testament grace were more prized and cultivated in the Christian Church. Let us consider it in some of its manifold aspects. What is the character of the faithful man? 1. He is true to himself; 2. He is true to his God; 3. He is true to his friend; 4. He is true to his word; 5. He is true when unobserved; 6. He is true in face of danger. II. His fruitfulness: 1. He is a recipient of abundant blessings; 2. He is a source of abundant blessings.—Pul. Com.

21, 22. (21) for . . bread,[a] i.e. for the smallest inducement. that man, better, "a man." (22) evil eye, that envies the gains and prosperities of others. the covetous man, R. V., "He that hath an evil eye hasteth after riches." considereth . . him, "He does not see that that very temper of grudging, carking care is leading him to poverty."

Haste to be Rich.—A Wyoming stock-raiser, dissatisfied with his surroundings and in haste to be rich, sold his land and started for the Klondike. A few months later a French mineralogist discovered near the despised ranch a mine of cobalt, a rare and valuable metal. The whole district promises to become a new centre of wealth. It was upon land sold to enable the former owner to start for the gold-mines of California, that the great oil-wells of Pennsylvania were afterward found; and both these incidents accentuate the fact that we are continually within reach of important discoveries and great opportunities, missing them by a hair's breadth of impatience, failure to observe or lack of preparation.

23, 24. (23) rebuketh, pointing out his fault. He may be disliked at first, but by-and-by he will be recognized as the truest friend.[b] flattereth, etc., and glosses over faults in order to keep in favor. (24) robbeth . . mother, comp. Mat. xv. 5, 6, and Pr. xix. 26.[c] no transgression, he salves his conscience by the plea that all would be his ere long in the course of nature. companion, etc., stands on the same footing. For "what wickedness will he scruple to commit who will rob his own parents?"[d]

Tact in Reproving.—A general who was in early life much addicted to profane oaths, dates his reformation from a memorable check he received from a Scottish clergyman. When he was a lieutenant, and stationed at Newcastle, he got involved in a brawl with some of the lowest class in the public street, and the altercation was carried on by both parties with abundance of impious language. The clergyman, passing by, was shocked with the profanity, and stepping into the crowd with his cane uplifted, thus addressed one of the leaders of the rabble:—"Oh, John, John! what is this I hear? You, only a poor collier boy, and swearing like any lord in all the land. Oh, John! have you no fear of what will become of you? It may do very well for this gallant gentleman (pointing to the lieutenant) to bang and swear as he pleases; but you—but you, John! it is not for you, or the like of you, to take in vain the name of Him in whom ye live and have your being." Then turning to the lieutenant, he continued, "Ye'll excuse the poor man, sir, for swearing; he is an ignorant body, and kens no better." The young officer slunk away in confusion, unable to make a reply.—Whitecross.

25, 26. (25) proud,[a] R. V., "greedy spirit," covetous and insatiable. made fat, or prospered and blessed,[b] bec. of his industry and dependence upon Jehovah. (26) own heart, here, his mere impulses, in contrast with the inspiration, counsel and precepts of God. wisely, i. e. carefully, considerately; but with reference to previous verse, looking for grace from God.

Self-confidence Reproved (vs. 26).—I. What is the conduct here reprobated? Such a man—1. Relies on his own wisdom and understanding; 2. On his own purposes and resolutions. II. The folly of it. 1. It robs us of the benefit we might derive from trusting in God; 2. It ensures beyond all doubt our ultimate disappointment; 3. It will keep us from discovering our error till it is past a remedy. See, then, from hence —(1) How desirable itself is knowledge; (2) How necessary is the knowledge of Christ.—C. Simeon.

Pride.—The proud man can never be contented. When he rises it

What is ill-gotten is commonly ill-spent.

a "The concrete designation of a trifle, a very slight value or advantage of any sort."
—O. Zockler.
"Those that are partial must be paltry. Those that have once broken through the bonds of equity, when they have debauched their consciences, will, at length, be so sordid that for a piece of bread they will give judgment against their consciences."
—Mat. Henry.

b "He that cries out against his surgeon for hurting him when he is searching his wound, will yet pay him well, and thank him too, when he has cured it."
—Mat. Henry.

c "Such, though heirs, are virtually thieves, to be ranked with highwaymen."
—Fausset.

d "The aggravation of sin is proportioned to the obligation of duty. Ingratitude is added to injustice."
—Bridges.

a "Or puffed-up soul, self-confident, and hence overbearing and litigious."
—Fausset.

b "Though the mariner sees not the polestar, yet the needle of the compass, which points to it, tells him which way he sails. Thus the heart that is touched with the loadstone of Div. love, trembling with godly fear, and yet still looking towards God by fixed believing, interprets the fear by the love in the fear, and tells the soul that its course is heavenward, towards the haven of eternal rest." — Abp. Leighton.

"In folly we advance to perdition, in aiming at our weal, in wisdom, renouncing self, we enter blessedness."

—Johnson.

[a] De. xv. 7.

[b] Is. i. 15.

[c] "Good men retire from public business into obscurity when the dregs of the nation rise up to the summit of public affairs and float as scum upon the surface." — Wordsworth.

"As the deepest hate may spring from the most violent love, so the greatest ingratitude may arise from the largest benefits. It is said that Cicero was slain by one whom his oratory had defended when he was accused of his father's murder." — J. Beaumont.

"Formerly it was the fashion to preach the natural; now it is the ideal. People too often forget that these things are profoundly compatible; that in a beautiful wor' of imagination the natural should be ideal, and the ideal natural."—A. W. VonSchlegel.

[d] Ex. xxxii. 9; 2 Ch. xxxvi. 16; Ne. ix. 29; Is. xlviii. 8; Je. xvii. 23; Ac. vii. 51.

"Sins repeated and reiterated are much greater than sins once committed. . . As in numbers, one in the is only to some pedestal from which he can see further wealth yet to be coveted, and further territory yet to be unrighteously claimed. When we trust in our own hearts we lived in wicked isolation. We are not here in the presence of that self-dependence which comes as the result of a large reading of history and a large comparison of facts; we are not in the presence of real self-dependence, but in the presence and under the dominion of false pride. We are called upon to walk in wisdom, and to remember that the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom. Those who put their trust in God will not find in themselves an answer to the enigmas and mysteries of life, but will continually turn to heaven that the key may be given to them wherewith to unlock the stubborn gate.—Parker.——Hope for the Foolish.—A noble Roman in the time of the Punic Wars received an honorable recognition from the Senate because he had not in the darkest times despaired of the Republic. That is the kind of debt that we owe to the Saviour. He has not despaired of any human being; He will not let us despair. It is His peculiar power, tried and proved again and again, to turn the fool into the wise man.—Exp. B.

27, 28. (27) not lack, the needful for himself.[a] hideth, etc.,[b] with the intention of disregarding the wants and cries of the poor, curse, fr. the neglected ones, wh. the Almighty ratifies and executes. (28) wicked rise, comp. vs. 12.[c] increase, in numbers, wealth and influence.

The Generous Man (vs. 27).—Something is here said by implication of—I. His hand. He giveth. II. His eye. The cause he knows not; he searches out. Many when aware of the approach of the poor look another way. III. His heart. Sympathizing, benevolent, tender. IV. His mind. He works and saves, that he may give. V. His recompense. God takes care that He shall have somewhat to give. Learn:—1. Let the rich remember their duty to the poor; 2. Let the poor rejoice that God takes care of their rich helpers.

The Life that Breeds Perpetual Benediction.—The kindly and generous heart prompts the generous hand; gathers more than it sows; is not suffered to want any good thing. It stands out in bright colors and warning aspect against the dark background of the selfish, self-concentrated, hard-hearted life. Let us cultivate the open eye which drinks in the knowledge of all that concerns our fellows, and the open hand in harmony with it.—Johnson.——Rev. Matthew Henry.—It is related of the excellent commentator, Matthew Henry, that he enforced upon himself and others sentiments calculated to promote a charitable disposition. "We lose," said he, "what we save. Withholding that which is meet tends to spiritual poverty—the worst of all husbandry: it is like grudging seed to the ground." As occasion served, he plainly pointed out the great evil of covetousness. Sometimes he urged upon all around him their exposure to that sin, and advised them to suspect themselves guilty of it. "We are born," said he, "with the world in our hearts." After lending seven guineas to obtain a discharge of the son of a poor friend, who had enlisted in the army, he observed that many reasons offered themselves why he should have abandoned him; but, in the spirit of genuine Christianity, he added, "The mercy of God to me, a provoking, backsliding sinner, answered them all. God doth not cut them off, though, by their iniquity, they have sold themselves."—R. T. S.

CHAPTER THE TWENTY-NINTH.

1. hardeneth his neck,[d] in a stiff-necked way persists in carrying through his own will. Allusion is made to the intractable, stubborn ox. He will not bend to the yoke, so he must be killed. without remedy, for who can help a man who thus refuses to be helped? Lit. "shall be destroyed, and no healing."

The Conduct and Punishment of Sinners (vs. 1).—I. Here is the conduct of an incorrigible sinner described. 1. He is often reproved; 2. He hardeneth his neck. II. The punishment of incorrigible sinners threatened. 1. He shall suddenly be destroyed; 2. He shall be destroyed without remedy. Apply:—(1) The season of God's long-suffering is limited; (2) Those who defer repentance deceive their own souls; (3) The reproofs of God should be regarded as expressions of His mercy; (4) Seasonable subjection to God's authority will be attended with certain salvation.—Alpha in 100 Sks.

Man's Self-will.—The godless man is content to live upon a level with the lowest level of brute life—to satisfy his bodily appetites, to eat and drink, and die and leave undeveloped all his capacities for spiritual growth and blessedness. But God would make him a co-worker with Himself in lifting him to a higher level and in making him a more useful and blessed creature. But men often resist this benevolent intention, and resent this check upon their self-will.—Pul. Com.

2, 3. (2) righteous, etc., comp. ch. xxviii. 12. (3) wisdom, here, the counsels of moral purity. keepeth company, or, more forcibly, who feedeth. harlots, who "play sad havoc with families; they draw sons to ruin, and parents to an untimely grave."[a] spendeth, R. V., "wasteth."

The Tradesman and the Prince.—A tradesman was sent for by the Prince of Wales, afterwards George IV., on the Sabbath day, as his Royal Highness was preparing to leave town early the next morning. That tradesman was one who feared God more than man; and at the risk of offending the prince and losing his valuable patronage, he declined to attend on God's day, but took care to be at the palace at a very early hour on Monday morning. "I sent for you yesterday," said the prince; "why did you not come?" "Your Royal Highness, the King wanted me." "The king! I thought my father never sent for tradesmen on Sundays." "Please your Royal Highness, I do not mean the king your father, but the King of kings." A word fitly spoken is indeed, as Solomon says, like apples of gold in pictures of silver.—Tract Mag.——The Religion of Politics.—Religion is concerned with politics. Too often the two spheres are kept disastrously distinct. On the one hand, it is pretended that the sacred character of religion would be desecrated by its being dragged into the political arena; and on the other hand, the claim of religion to have a voice in public affairs is set down to the ambition and tyranny of priestcraft. Now, it is not to be supposed that purely religious subjects should be obtruded on the uncongenial platform of a public meeting. Very possibly they would be resented; we are not to cast pearls before swine. Moreover, there is a time for everything. But religion claims to influence politics, to be a leading factor in public movements, to hold the standard by which all political actions are to be judged. It must do this if it is to carry out its mission of leavening the whole lump. It should leave no region of life untouched; commerce, literature, art, science, recreation, society and politics must all come under its influence. For religion to withdraw from politics is to hand that important region of life over to the devil. We find that the Bible has much to say on the conduct of public affairs.—Pul. Com.

4. by judgment, or the just administration of justice. By righteous decisions, as opposed to those which are given on the persuasions of bribes.[a] receiveth gifts, gladly accepts bribes for partiality. overthroweth it, bec. nothing so unsettles a nation as corruption in the seat of judgment.

Peter the Great.—In the year 1718 Peter the Great assembled a grand council, in order to state to them a new project of internal government. When they were met, he first reminded them of the duty of all monarchs to protect their people from foreign assaults; to preserve peace, order, and quiet, at home; and to execute justice alike against the prince, the peer, and the peasant; he added, that he then found it necessary to turn his attention towards repressing and correcting the abuses of power and authority of some of his governors of the provinces, and of the lieutenants under them, who he found had been guilty of oppression and peculation, and had enriched themselves at the expense of his people—a people, whose contributions and sacrifices had, for eighteen years, merited every attention, and now called for him to defend them against all such bloodsuckers. The emperor then announced that he had established a tribunal of justice, for the inquiry into, and the redressing of, all abuses; and that he had appointed as president the most honest of his counsellors. Among those brought before this new council or chamber of justice, were Princes Menzikof and Dolgoroucki, the grand admiral, and other minor offenders. The court, in its inquiries, spared first place stands but for a single one, in the second place ten, in the third place for a hundred, so here, each repetition is a great aggravation." — Swinnock.

[a] "She weaves the winding sheets of souls, and lays them in the urn of everlasting death."—Pollok.

"Let every man ask himself with which of his faculties he can and will somehow influence his age." — Goethe.

"If you would be well with a great mind, leave him with a favorable impression of you; if with a little mind, leave him with a favorable opinion of himself." — Coleridge.

"Religion, unfeignedly lived, perfecteth man's abilities unto all kinds of virtuous services in the commonwealth." —Hooker.

"Beware of little expenses; a small leak will sink a great ship." — Franklin.

[a] "A king must make religion the rule of government, and not to balance the scale; for he that casteth in religion only to make the scales even, his own weight is contained in those characters.

"That was not an inconsiderable moment, when wild armed men first raised their strongest aloft on the buckler-throne and, with clanging armor and hearts said solemnly Be thou our acknowledged strongest (well named King. Kon-ning, Canning, or Man that was Able), what a symbol shone now for them — significant with the destinies of the world! A symbol of true guidance in return for loving obedience; properly, if he knew it, the prime want of man. A symbol which might be called sacred, for is there not, in reverence for what is better than we, an indestructible sacredness?"

—Carlyle.

b "When we are most commended for our discernment we generally act most foolishly, for those very praises cloud the understanding and pervert the judgment." — Scott.

c "A flatterer spreads a net for a friend's feet, but a sinner lays a snare for himself." — Wordsworth.

"In the steps of a bad man lie snares, but the righteous runs and rejoices."—Delitzsch.

"Many times God is present in the still voice, and private retirements of a quiet religion, and the constant spiritualities of an ordinary life; when the loud and impetuous winds, and the shining fires of more laborious and expensive actions are profitable to others only, like a tree of balsam distilling precious liquor for others, not for its own use." — Doddridge.

"There may be times when you cannot find help, but there is no time when you cannot give help." — George S. Merriam.

"He does this even when he is not intending it; neither rank nor influence, and brought before its bar Baron Schafiroff, the vice-chancellor, the favorite of the emperor, and his prime minister. The baron was convicted on several charges; one of which was for raising the rates of postage, and keeping the advance for himself; and another for giving his brother a lucrative position, unknown to the emperor or senate. The baron was condemned to death. When the day of execution came, the people were summoned by sound of trumpet; he was led to the public place, and his sentence read to him; but when his head was laid on the block, and the axe raised over him, a herald proclaimed the mercy of the emperor, in changing the sentence of death for perpetual banishment to Siberia, with the confiscation of all his property. This severity had, however, a good effect, in rendering the administration less corrupt.—Percy Anec.

5, 6. (5) flattereth, comp. ch. xxvi. 28. net, etc., by misleading the man as to his real character, he puts him in the power of the tempter.[b] (6) a snare, for the man himself: entanglement in it, and punishment at the end of it.[c] sing, in the confidence and joy of his security and divine favor.

The Gladness of Goodness (vs. 6).—The righteous rejoices—I. In the works and ways of God. II. In the comfortable assurance of his own mind. III. In the prosperity of other men. IV. At all times: "songs in the night." V. At the prospect of a glorious resurrection.

Abdallah and the Fly.—It was the third hour of the day, and Abdallah still lingered over the morning repast, when there came a little fly and alighted on the rim of his goblet. It sipped a particle of syrup and was gone. It came next morning, and the next, and the next again, till it caught the eye of the scholar. As he considered it, and as it gave forth its many colors and moved itself aright, it seemed beautiful exceedingly, and in his heart he could not find to drive it away. Wherefore it came day by day continually, and waxing bolder and bolder it withal became greater and greater, till in the size of a locust could be perceived as the likeness of a man; and the greater that it grew, the more winning were its ways, frisking like a sunbeam, singing like a peri, so that the eyes of the simple one were blinded, and in all this he did not perceive the subtlety of an evil jinn. Wherefore, waxing bolder and yet bolder, whatsoever of dainty meats its soul desired the lying spirit freely took, and when, waxing wroth, the son of the prophet said, "This is my daily portion from the table of the mufti; there is not enough for thee and me," playing one of its pleasant tricks, the brazen-faced deceiver caused the simple one to smile; until in process of time the scholar perceived that as his guest waxed stronger and stronger, he himself waxed weaker and weaker. Now also there arose frequent contention between the demon and his dupe, and the youth smote the demon so sore that it departed for a season. Thereupon Abdallah rejoiced exceedingly, and said, "I have triumphed over mine enemy, and when it seemeth good in my sight, I shall smite him that he die." But after not many days, lo and behold! the jinn came again, arrayed in goodly garments, and bringing a present in its hand, and with its fair speech saying, "Is it not a little one?" it enticed this silly dove so that he again received it into his chamber. On the morrow, when Abdallah came not into the assembly of studious youths, the mufti said, "Wherefore tarrieth the son of the faithful? perchance he sleepeth." Therefore they resorted even to his chamber, and knocked and lifted up their voice; but as he made no answer the mufti opened the door, and behold! on the divan lay the dead body of his disciple. His visage was black and swollen, and on his throat was the pressure of a finger broader than the palm of a mighty man. All the stuff belonging to the hapless one was gone, the gold and the jewels, and the parchment rolls, and the changes of raiment; and in the soft earth of the garden was discerned the footsteps of a giant. The mufti measured one of the prints, and lo! it was six cubits long. What means the apologue? Who can expound the riddle? Is it the bottle or the betting-book? is it the billiard table? is it the theater, or the saloon? is it laziness? is it debt? is it the wasted Sunday? But know that an evil habit is an elf constantly expanding. It may come in at the keyhole, but it will soon grow too big for the house. At first it may seem too trivial for serious attack, but it will presently prove the death of the owner.—J. Hamilton.

7. cause .. poor, Job xxix. 13—16. regardeth not, careth not, will not set himself to gain a true knowl. of their condition and needs.

Louis IX. and the Kitchen-boy.—Louis IX., king of France, was found instructing a poor kitchen-boy; and being asked why he did so, replied, "The meanest person hath a soul as precious as my own, and bought with the same blood of Christ."—Cheever.——Giving to the Needy Giving to Christ.—St. Martin, before he was baptized into the faith of Christ, and while still a soldier, showed a rare instance of love and charity. In the depth of winter, a beggar, clothed in rags, asked an alms of him for the love of God. Silver and gold he had none. His soldier's cloak was all he had to give. He drew his sword, cut it in half, gave one portion to the poor man, and was content himself with the other. And of him it may be truly said, "He had his reward."—Bib. Ill.

8, 9. (8) Scornful,[a] mockers, such as head civil strife. Such as contemptuously disregard God's law, and are not swayed by moral principles or national virtues. bring .. snare, better, "set the city on fire:" kindle, with their inflammatory counsels, the fire of civil discord.[a] wrath, if it is found among the people.[b] (9) rage or laugh, try to influence him by denunciations, or humble him by satire; his work will be in vain. The foolish, and frivolous will learn of no masters. Delitzsch and others, deeming that the rage and the laughter are not becoming to the character of the wise man, take the fool as the subject; so that the sense is, that after all has been said, the fool only falls into a passion or laughs at the matter, argument is wasted upon him, and the controversy is never settled.—Pul. Com.

The Scoffer Silenced.—A Presbyterian minister delivered a series of discourses against infidelity, in a town in Louisiana, on the Red River, some of the citizens of which were known to be sceptical. A few days afterwards he took passage in a steamer ascending the Mississippi, and found on board several of the citizens of that town, among whom was a disciple of Tom Paine, noted as the ringleader of a band of infidels. So soon as he discovered the minister, he commenced his blasphemies; and when he perceived him reading at one of the tables, he proposed to his companions to go with him to the opposite side of the table and listen to some stories that he had to tell upon religion and religious men, which he said would annoy the old preacher. Quite a number, prompted by curiosity, gathered around him to listen to his vulgar stories and anecdotes, all of which were pointed against the Bible and its ministers. The preacher did not raise his eyes from the book which he was reading, nor appear to be in the least disconcerted by the presence of the rabble. At length the infidel walked up to him, and, rudely slapping him on the shoulder, said, "Old fellow, what do you think of these things?" He calmly pointed out of the door, and said, "Do you see that beautiful landscape spread out in such quiet loveliness before you?" "Yes." "It has a variety of flowers, plants, and shrubs, that are calculated to fill the beholder with delight." "Yes." "Well, if you were to send out a dove, he would pass over that scene and see in it all that was beautiful and lovely, and delight himself in gazing at and admiring it; but if you were to send out a buzzard over precisely the same scene, he would see in it nothing to fix his attention, unless he could find some rotten carcass that would be loathsome to all other animals, in which case he would alight and gloat upon it with exquisite pleasure." "Do you mean to compare me to a buzzard, sir?" said the infidel, coloring very deeply. "I made no allusion to you, sir," said the minister, very quietly. The infidel walked off in confusion, and went by the name of "The Buzzard" during the remainder of the passage.

10, 11. (10) bloodthirsty, Heb. "men of blood." Ps. v. 6, xxvi. 9. upright, R. V., "him that is perfect." seek, etc., i. e. care for, in order to preserve, the righteous; R. V., "and as for the upright they seek his life," i. e. to take it away. (11) all his mind,[c] no matter how imprudent the occasion. Over-free speech is characteristic of the foolish; mind may stand for spirit, passion; R. V., "anger." The foolish man has no self-the web of enticing errors before his neighbors' eyes becomes, when he comes into contact with them, a net in which he is caught."—Hitzig.

"The happiness of love is in action; its test is what one is willing to do for others." — Gen. Lew Wallace.

[a] "Such as scorn to be hampered by laws and constitutions." — Mat. Henry.

[a] "Set the minds of the people on fire against the powers that be." —Spk. Com.

[b] "Nothing can make a man so good a patriot as religion." — Bp. Hall.

"The fool of Scripture is not an idiot, but an absurd person; not one who does not reason at all, but one who reasons wrong; also any one whose conduct is not regulated by the dictates of reason and religion."—Kitto.

"If a bee stings you, will you go to the hive and destroy it? Would not a thousand come upon you? If you receive a trifling injury, do not go about the streets proclaiming it, and be anxious to avenge it. Let it drop. It is wisdom to say little respecting the injuries you may have received." —Anon.

"The best ground untilled, soonest runs out into rank weeds. A man of knowledge that is either negligent or uncorrected, cannot but grow wild and godless."—Bp. Hall.

[c] Usually they that speak much, speak much amiss.

"He is wise who knows when to hold his peace." — Ambrose.

"As small letters hurt the sight, so do small matters him that is too much intent upon them; they vex and stir up anger, which begets an evil habit in him in reference to greater affairs." —Plutarch.

"It is a shameful thing to be weary of inquiry, when what we search for is excellent." —Cicero.

restraint. keepeth .. afterwards, R. V., "keepeth it back and stilleth it:" i. e. exercises self-control.

The Feeling of Resentment.—"A fool uttereth all his anger, but a wise man keepeth it back and stilleth it." Nothing more distinctly marks the presence of wisdom or folly than the habit of speaking quickly or restraining speech under provocation. It is an unfailing criterion. The reasons for silence at such a time are obvious enough, and they should be strong enough. 1. Hasty speech is (1) very likely indeed to be incorrect, imperfect, if not wholly wrong, for our judgment is sure to be disturbed and unhinged when our spirit is wounded; (2) Most likely to provoke our opponent to feel strongly and to strike severely, and thus the flood-gates of strife are opened; (3) unworthy of the wise and strong, lowering in the eyes of our best friends and in our own regard; (4) Condemned of God. 2. Conscientious silence under provocation is (1) An admirable victory over our lower nature; (2) The way of peace in the council, in the home, in the Church; (3) The path in which we follow Christ our Lord, and gain His Divine approval.—Clarkson.

12, 13. (12) to lies, or falsehood, all sorts of talebearing.[a] wicked, knowing just what pleases their master, they will become informers and backbiters. (13) deceitful man, or usurer.. He takes his advantage of the poor. meet together, either socially, or in conflict: the needy resist the exactions of the usurer. lighteneth, etc., He knows both. "He is their common Father and Judge." "Both depend on Him, and He will do justice."[b]

Open Ears and Nimble Tongues (vs. 12).—I. A ruler with an open ear; ready to hear anything; easily imposed upon; plenty to detract from others, and be the purveyors of scandal; most that will be told him will be false. II. The servants' nimble tongues; each one anxious to get favor for himself; hopes to do this by depreciating others; the ruler hears of each in turn, and according to the tale of each, all save himself are wicked. III. The judicial mind. The ruler should bring the traducer and the traduced face to face; this done at once and in the first instance would operate as a caution to others.

Corrupt Royalty.—Here is the complete and absolute corruption of the Divine royalty. The description holds true age after age; suggested by the decline of the monarchy in Israel, it applies accurately to the Imperial government at Rome, and it might have been written to describe the character and the government of the Stuarts in England. Strong in what they supposed to be their Divine Right, they became liars and hearkened to falsehood; their servants became wicked; their government perished from its own inherent rottenness. The description holds, too, of the French monarchy from the time of Louis XIV. to its fall. And it would seem, as indeed we may confidently believe, that the slow and imperceptible decay of the faith in the divine right of kings has been in God's hands a long preparation for the reign of Him whose right it is to reign, Jesus Christ, the true King of men.—Exp. B.

14, 15. (14) judgeth the poor,[c] who cannot secure decisions by bribes. (15) rod, the symbol of parental correction.[d] But correction must never take the place of moral persuasion. Both are requisite. left to himself, "left loose, as a horse without a rein." Pampered and indulged. "Exempted fr. discipline, left to his own will."

The Three Philosophers.—A very rich man once upon a time chanced also—strange to say!—to be a very unhappy man, and offered an immense sum of money to any one that would make him happy. A philosopher brought to him a new game that he had invented. It was a good game, and whoever invents a good game does a good deed. But in a few days the rich man wearied of the game. Came next a philosopher who set the rich man to work sawing boards, and planing them, and making things; and for a time he was very happy, for labor is a great lightener of the heart. But one day he could think of nothing else to make, and of no place to put it after it was made, so that all his gloom returned. Whereupon came a third philosopher, who set the rich man to doing things for other people. And the rich man has been happy ever since.—Chr. Endeavor World.——Good Government.—Must not the test of every government be at last this—What did it accomplish for the poor, for the burdened, for the slave, and the oppressed? "Glorious"

"As small letters hurt the sight, so do small matters him that is too much intent upon them; they vex and stir up anger, which begets an evil habit in him in reference to greater affairs." —Plutarch.

"It is a shameful thing to be weary of inquiry, when what we search for is excellent." —Cicero.

a "He that carrieth Satan in his ear is no less blameworthy than he who carrieth him in his tongue." — Muffet.

b "Here is comfort to the poor in his sufferings; here is warning to the rich in his violence." — Wordsworth.

"A man who takes delight in hearing the faults of others, shows sufficiently that he has a true relish of scandal, and consequently the seeds of this vice within him."

—Addison.

"Rulers are the looking - glasses according to which most men dress themselves." — Hom. Com.

c Pr. xx. 28, xxv. 5.

"So that he permits true judgment to reach the poor."—Hitzig.

d Comp. Pr. xiii. 24, xxiii. 13.

"The mother who thus yields weakly to what is really a self-indulgence, is as guilty of abandoning the child she spoils, as if she cast him forth; and inasmuch as evil neglect no less wars and additions of territory can never compensate for injustice at home; the renown of arms for a people's misery. The throne that is not propped by bayonets, but built upon a people's gratitude and loyalty, may defy the storms of revolution.—Johnson.

16, 17. (16) wicked .. increaseth, this is a general truth; wicked men encourage one another, and so increase wickedness; or reference may be to wicked rulers, who encourage the wicked in the land. see .. fall, and triumph in it;[a] look on it with satisfaction, bec. of their deliverance fr. civic misrule. (17) Correct, as vs. 15.[b] delight, lit. delights, the plural signifying the variety of forms of pleasure, in well-trained children, which parents may gain.

Causes of Public Immorality (vs. 16).—I. A case supposed—"the wicked multiplied." 1. By miscarriage of justice—undetected crime; 2. Venality of officers of justice; 3. By personal influence of ungodly; 4. By neglected youth—as, from the connection, this seems to be the cause indicated. II. The result anticipated. 1. Increase of transgressors; 2. Reign of lawlessness; 3. One encouraging and tempting another. III. The inevitable issue. 1. Transgressors shall fall, "though wickedness join hand in hand," etc.; 2. The righteous shall see it. Hence we infer that while the wicked shall fall, the righteous will look safely on.

18. no vision, as 1 Sa. iii. 1. "Redemptive revelations of God are meant."—Thomas. More generally, instruction in God's truth, given mainly in those days by prophets, who received visions. people perish, lit. "are let loose,"[a] like hair dishevelled. Are unprincipled, unbridled; R. V., "cast off restraint." Hos. iv. 6.

Divine Vision Essential to Human Salvation (vs. 18).—I. True vision is a revelation from God. Such a communication is probable from—1. The conflicting indications of the Divine character furnished by nature; 2. The universally felt moral necessities of man. II. There are many places where, as yet, this vision is not. III. Where it is not the people perish. 1. It alone reveals a Saviour adapted to man; 2. It alone is associated with spiritual power to deliver man from the bondage, and misery, and guilt, and doom of sin. Learn:—(1) The vision of God is, to those who possess it, a most precious thing; (2) They who possess it not ought to be the objects of the deepest compassion; 3. They who possess it are bound by every consideration of gratitude and pity to send it to those who do not.—J. M. Tarvie.

Power of Scriptures.—The power and efficacy of the Scripture upon the souls of men showeth it to be of God; and the wonderful alteration that it makes in a man for God, when he doth entertain and believe it in his heart. It makes him more than a man in power to oppose, resist, and fight against his own corruptions; it brings him into wonderful familiarity and acquaintance with God. It puts such life and strength into him that, for God's sake and His truth, he can suffer all the hardest things in the world without complaining, yea, with exceeding and wonderful rejoicing.—E. Leigh.——A Scientist's Testimony.—The highest and most consoling beliefs of the human mind are to a great extent bound up with the Christian religion. If we ask ourselves frankly how much, apart from this religion, would remain of faith in a God, and in a future state of existence, the answer must be, very little. Science traces everything back to primeval atoms and germs, and there it leaves us. How came these atoms and energies there, from which this wonderful universe of worlds has been evolved by inevitable laws? What are they in their essence, and what do they mean? The only answer is, It is unknowable. It is "behind the veil," and may be anything. Spirit may be matter, matter may be spirit. We have no faculties by which we can even form a conception, from any discoveries of the telescope or microscope, from any experiments in the laboratory, or from any facts susceptible of real human knowledge, of what may be the first cause underlying all these phenomena.—S. Laing.

19, 20. (19) servant, or slave. Reference is to one who lacks right principle, who is stubborn and sulky. words, i. e. words alone. He needs chastisement.[a] not answer, in obedient action. (20) hasty, etc., see ch. xxvi. 12. of a fool, i. e. the dull, stupid fool who is sensible of his folly. The free talker is usually the conceited boaster.

than evil act works out its own punishment, there shall fall upon her the righteous punishment of shame and ignominy."—Spk. Com.

[a] Ps. xxxvii. 34—38, lviii. 10, 11.

[b] Pr. xiii. 24, xix. 18, xxii. 15, xxiii. 13, 14.

Cyrillus Alexandrinus tells us when man was alone upon the earth there was then no such matter as sinning.

[a] "Or 'are made naked.' Stripped of their ornaments and so exposed to shame; stripped of their armour, and so exposed to danger." — Mat. Henry.

We may then a little amplify the proverb for the sake of exposition: "Where there is no living revelation between man and God, there the bonds which hold society together are relaxed or broken; but he that holds by the revelation that has been given, so far as it has been presented to him, happy is he."—Exp. B.

Bonaventure wrote out the Scriptures twice, and learned most of them by heart.

[a] "If thou wouldst have a good servant, let the servant find thee a good master. Be not angry with him too long, lest he think thee malicious; nor too soon, lest he conceive thee rash; nor too often, lest he count thee humorous."—Quarles.

Servants and Servants (vs. 19).—I. Servants of all qualities may need to be occasionally corrected. The employer must have his work done in his own way since he pays for it, though it may not be the best way. II. Some servants are pert, give saucy answers, show they forget their position, prove that they are intractably conceited. III. Others are sulky, will not answer at all, either by apology or promise of amendment. IV. God is the great Master of all; He issues distinct commands all may understand, and should promptly make confession of fault and promise of improvement.

21, 22. (21) delicately, i. e. that pampers him; allows him undue familiarity and indulgence. become .. son, i. e. assume the place and privilege of one. Some render the word used ungrateful, or refractory. (22) angry, etc., as ch. xv. 18.

The Spoiled Servant (vs. 21).—I. The cause of this unwise treatment. 1. The unwise preference of the master; 2. The sneaking duplicity of the servant; 3. Often the absence of a trusted domestic companion; sometimes the fact that the children are disobedient; 4. Frequently through not perceiving the proper relations of parties. II. The consequences that flow from it. 1. The gradual ascendency of the servant, until he obtains power, through a knowledge of the master's private affairs; 2. The displacement of the children from the parent's love; 3. The entire family at length tyrannized over by the servant.

Swift's Butler.—During the publication of the Drapier's Letters, Swift was particularly careful to conceal himself from being known as the author. The only persons in the secret were Robert Blakely, his butler, whom he employed as an amanuensis, and Dr. Sheridan. It happened that on the very evening before the proclamation, offering a reward of £300 for discovering the author of these letters, was issued, Robert Blakely stopped out later than usual without his master's leave. The dean ordered the door to be locked at the accustomed hour, and shut him out. The next morning the poor fellow appeared before his master with marks of great contrition. Swift would hear no excuses, but, abusing him severely, bade him strip off his livery, and quit the house instantly. "What!" said he, "is it because I am in your power that you can dare to take these liberties with me? Get out of my house, and receive the reward of your treachery." Mrs. Johnson (Stella), who was at the deanery, did not interfere, but immediately despatched a messenger to Dr. Sheridan, who, on his arrival, found Robert walking up and down the hall in great agitation. The doctor bade him not be uneasy, as he would try to pacify the dean, so that he should continue in his place. "That is not what vexes me," replied Robert, "though to be sure I should be sorry to lose so good a master; but what grieves me to the soul is that my master should have so bad an opinon of me as to suppose me capable of betraying him for any reward whatever." When this was related to the dean he was so struck with the honor and generosity of sentiment which it exhibited in one so humble in life, that he immediately restored him to his situation, and was not long in rewarding his fidelity. The place of verger to the cathedral becoming vacant, Swift called Robert to him, and bestowed it upon him.—Percy Anecdotes.

23, 24. (23) pride, etc., as ch. xvi. 18, xviii. 12. honour shall uphold, R. V., "he that is of a lowly spirit shall obtain honor"[a] (ch. xi. 16). (24) partner .. thief, may not be himself a thief, but he cannot keep from himself the shame of his partner's wrongdoing. As the concealer of the thief he must share the thief's penalty. heareth cursing, the public declaration of the crime; R. V., "heareth the adjuration." When a theft was committed, the person wronged or the judge pronounced an imprecation on the thief and on any one who was privy to the crime, and refrained from giving information; a witness who was silent under this formal adjuration is not only an accomplice of a criminal, he is also a perjurer.—Pul. Com. bewrayeth,[b] does not reveal the thief; keeps silence.

Humility.—Be sure that God who made us knows how much honor or wealth we can sustain; when he draws the line and says, "Hitherto shall fortune come, and no farther," he knows that any addition to what we already possess would destroy our equilibrium, and cause us, it may be, to plunge into some infinite chasm. What have we that we have not

The Emperor Valentinian punished the Quadi with great severity; and when they came to implore his mercy he upbraided them with every mark of resentment, and spoke with such vehemence, that he broke a blood-vessel, and fell lifeless on the ground.

"The way to avoid the imputation of impudence is not to be ashamed of what we do, but never to do what we ought to be ashamed of."—Tully.

"The only disadvantage of an honest heart is credulity." —P. Sidney.

"An honest man's the noblest work of God."—Pope.

"If you have nothing be an honest beggar, rather than a respectable thief.' — Emerson.

"Honesty coupled to beauty, is to have honey a sauce to sugar." — Shakespeare.

"He that would build lastingly must lay his foundation low. As man falls by pride, he recovers by humility."

[a] "The more God honoreth men, the more they should humble themselves. The more bounty God shows, the more humility He requires."—Reynolds.

[b] Bewray is old Eng. to disclose. "The partaker is as bad as the thief."

"Tell me what company you keep, and I will tell you what you are."

received? If we have genius, the light is not of our own kindling; if we have great practical power, we hold it as a trust; if we have wealth, we should remember the words, "The Lord thy God giveth thee power to get wealth." Humility is the salvation of character. Humility, however, cannot be put on; it cannot be arranged for, or be made matter of calculation, as who should say, See how I succeeded in humbling myself, or in clothing myself with the beautiful garments of modesty. Humility is the result of divine action in the soul. To have seen God is to have been cleansed from all vanity; to have been near the king is to turn our eyes with contempt upon all the circumstances and fading glory of this transient world.—Parker.

25. fear of man, i. e. of what he may be able to do to us. snare, entangles us in the consequences of wrongdoing.[c] trust . . Lord, and so fears Him only. safe, "set on high;" secured and established.

The Fear of Man.—I. The fear. 1. In what it consists; (1) Fear of human authority; (2) Fear of the great; (3) Fear of society; (4) Fear of the multitude; (5) Fear of those we love. 2. How it originates; (1) In cowardice; (2) In godlessness. II. Its snare. 1. The deception of it; (1) In regard to duty; (2) In regard to danger. 2. The fatality of it. III. Its antidote.—Pul. Com.

Trust in God.—A traveler in the Alps had been climbing a precipice which gradually became more and more steep. But he was lured onward by the pleasure of the exercise and the purpose of reaching the top, till he found he could go no further. Now, looking back, he saw he could not return. To attempt to descend would be certain destruction. He was in great peril. He had but an inch or two of footing, which might at any moment give way, and his strength was beginning to fail. He had been watched by a friend, who saw his peril, and by another route reached the summit of the rock, and lowered a rope. What must he do? Believe! He hesitated. The rope might break, his friend's arm might fail, but the path was crumbling, his own strength was going; so he believed: that is, he trusted his friend and obeyed his directions, and so was drawn up to safety. So let us believe and be saved. Let us take Christ at His word. Let us accept His mercy and obey His commands. Then shall we be saved—saved from guilt and condemnation; saved from death and judgment; saved now from wretchedness and ruin. We shall be saved, and so able to fulfil our high vocation to live for God and serve Him.—Newman Hall.

26, 27. (26) Many, etc., as ch. xix. 6. from the Lord, fr. Jehovah, the Supreme Ruler. "It is better to wait for the judgment of the Lord than to run hither and thither, canvassing, bribing, flattering."—Spk. Com. (27) abomination, in each case the word applies to "instinctive antipathy."[a]

The Supreme Arbiter.—I. It is a common mistake to ascribe to man the influence which belongs only to God. II. God's judgment will be experienced by every man. III. It is good news for the world that God is the Supreme Arbiter. 1. God is just; 2. God is wise; 3. God is strong. IV. It is well for men to acknowledge God as their Arbiter.—Pul. Com.

English Sirdar.—Mr. Forbes, who passed nearly twenty years in India, says that "the character of the English in India is an honor to their country." That his own was is pretty evident from the highly flattering address which the inhabitants of Dhubay presented to him on the morning of his final departure. "Dhubay," says this address, "famed among the cities of the East, was happy when the English sirdar presided in their durbar; his disposition towards the inhabitants was with the best consideration. He afforded shelter to all, whether they were rich or poor; he delivered them from trouble, and restored them to comfort. All castes who looked up to him obtained redress, without distinction, and without price. When he took the poor by the hand he made him rich; under his protection the people were happy, and reposed on the bed of ease. When he superintended the garden, each gardener performed his duty; rills of water flowed to every flower, and all the trees of the garden flourished. So equal was his justice, that the tiger and the kid might drink at the same fountain;.and often did he redeem c "It easily betrays into a participation in the sinful actions of men."—O. Zockler.

"There cannot be a more worthy improvement of friendship than in a fervent opposition to the sins of those whom we profess to love." —Bp. Hall.

"The soul that cannot entirely trust God, whether man be pleased or displeased, can never long be true to him; for while you are eyeing man you are losing God, and stabbing religion at the very heart." — Manton.

"It is not a transference of fear from man to God that can make the sinner safe. The kind of affection must be changed as well as its object."

a "It is no good sign for him who would be upright when he can be on friendly terms with the ungodly." —Von Gerlach.

"Acquaintance is mere collocation of persons; friendship and Christian communism are the eternal affinity of souls in God."—Johnson.

"There is a mutual hatred between the good and the bad, old as the devil,deep as hell, strong and universal as death. So long as wickedness exists this mutual antagonism must continue." —Dav. Thomas.

Ps. cxxxix. 21, 22; Jno. xv. 17—19; Ro. viii. 7. "A faithful friend is better than gold, — a medicine for misery, an only possession." — Burton.

the kid from the tiger's mouth. Under his administration the rich dared not oppress the poor, for his eyes were open to the great and small. In this country we have not known any government so upright as that of the English. Alas! if our protector forsakes us, we shall be disconsolate as a widow; we shall mourn the loss of a father, and weep as for the death of a mother! Allah! in thy mercy, continue him to us."—Percy Anec.

CHAPTER THE THIRTIETH.

1. Agur, a name wholly unknown. Some suppose him to have been an honored teacher, and Ithiel and Ucal two of his scholars. Jakeh, some render, "son of her who was obeyed (i. e. the queen of), Massah,"[a] the prophecy, R. V., "the oracle." That "the words" are not of the nature of Divine communications can be seen at once by consideration of their contents, which are mainly of human, and not of the highest type, and, though capable of spiritual interpretation, do not possess that uniqueness of purpose, that religious char. and elevation of subject, wh. one expects in the enunciations of an inspired prophet.—Pul. Com. Ithiel means "God with me." Ucal, the Mighty One. "Prob. indicating the moral character wh. the author desires, and the kind of persons whom Agur addresses."—Wordsworth. Stuart (with whom some others agree) translates the vs. as follows: "The words of Agur, the son of her who was obeyed in Massa. Thus spake the man: I have toiled for God, I have toiled for God, and have ceased."

[a] "Son of the princes of Massah."—O. Zockler.

The word jakeh, signifies reverent, pious, obedient; from the verb yakah, to fear.

"To believe in Christ is to be like him. All other faith is a mere mist of words dissolving into empty air. To live our human lives as he lived his—purely, lovingly, righteously — is to share his eternity." — Lucy Larcom.

Some Christians are like decayed milestones which stand in the right road and bear some traces of the proper impression, but so wretchedly mutilated and defaced that those who pass by can hardly read or know what to make of them.

Agur.—This chapter is full of curious interest. It is a collection of sayings which are apparently connected only by the circumstance that they were attributed to one person, Agur, the son of Jakeh. Whoever Agur was, he had a certain marked individuality; he combined meditation on lofty questions of theology with a sound theory of practical life. He was able to give valuable admonitions about conduct. But his characteristic delight was to group together in quatrains visible illustrations of selected qualities or ideas.—Exp. B.——Traveler's Fare.—I ask only a pittance for my passage, but not an abundance for my portion in these things: yea, though Thou shouldst give me no kid to make merry with, yet will I not murmur at Thy bounty to prodigals, if Thou wilt say, "Son, all that is laid up is thine, though thou hast little or nothing of what is laid out:" but I will pray, "Turn, Lord, mine eyes from beholding, and my heart from affecting earthly vanities, and fix all my desires upon heaven, that I may look and long for it, in which there is nothing that can offend, but everything that will delight and satisfy to eternity."—W. Spurstowe.

2, 3. (2) more brutish, comp. confession of Ps. lxxiii. 22. The admission not merely of ignorance, but even of natural incapacity for apprehending Divine things.[a] A strong term to denote his lowly self-estimation. (3) learned wisdom, i. e. he did not regard himself as learned, certainly not as having complete knowledge. nor, etc., R. V. marg., "that I should have the knowl." the holy, i. e. the Holy One, God. It was in the higher truths he most felt his failure.

[a] Comp. Mat. xi. 25; 1 Cor. iii. 18, iv. 10.

"Humility is at once the characteristic and qualification of all true philosophy.'

"Every believer's experience witnesseth to this, that every one that believes on Jesus Christ, acts that faith as the chief of sinners; every man that seeth himself rightly thinks so of himself, and therein thinks not amiss. God only knows who is truly the greatest sinner, and every humbled sinner will think he is the man."—Traill.

The Source of True Humility.—I. In proportion as men know God they confess they know Him not. II. Therefore humility is the sign of high attainments in Divine knowledge, and those who know most will be the most able and willing to be taught more. III. The unsearchableness of God is no hindrance to practical godliness.—Hom. Com.

Humility.—Self-contempt may be the beginning of true wisdom. Here is a rebuke to that pride which brings destruction, and to that haughtiness which precedes a fall. Every man should know exactly how little he is, how frail, in some aspects and senses how worthless, and out of this self-abasement will come a correct conception of the possibilities of life and destiny of the soul. We must not begin too high. Children of the dust should begin where God Himself began them: they did not begin as divine, and then proceed to incarnation; they began as dust, and then received the Divine breath.—Parker.

4. Who .. heaven,[b] God is in heaven, and yet descends to visit man, but He is the only being that can be everywhere. bound the waters, with the girdle of the shores.[c] all the ends, so that nothing whatever can be found that is beyond His control. his name, or His adequate and perfect description: a name should be a complete definition. son's name,[d] i. e. we do not know God or His family, so to speak; the Almighty is a profound mystery to speculative thought.

Trusting in God.—A military officer being in a dreadful storm, his lady, who was sitting in the cabin near him, and filled with alarm for the safety of the vessel, was so surprised at his composure, that she cried out, "My dear, are you not afraid? How is it possible you can be so calm in such a storm?" He rose from a chair lashed to the deck, and drew his sword. Pointing it to his wife's breast, he said, "Are you not afraid?" She instantly replied, "No—certainly not." "Why?" said the officer. "Because," rejoined his lady, "I know the sword is in the hand of my husband, and he loves me too well to hurt me." "Then," said he, "remember, I know in whom I have believed, and that He holds the winds in His fists, and the waters in the hollow of His hand."

5, 6. (5) pure,[e] R. V., "tried," Ps. xii. 6, xviii. 30, xix. 8, cxix. 140. It is far better humbly to study the revealed Word than to puzzle over unexplained and insoluble mysteries. shield, etc., Ps. xviii. 30; contrast bet. the possibility of speculative knowl. (vs. 4) and the reality of revelation and experience. (6) Add .. words,[e] the tendency to add to God's revelation is seen in the crowding traditions of our Lord's time. But reference is here specially intended to vain human speculations. a liar, one making representations and explanations which are proved to be false and unworthy.

The Purity of God's Words.—I. The refuge from vain speculation is practical revelation. II. The revelation of God is pure. 1. It is free from error; 2. It is free from moral corruption. III. The purity of God's Word should inspire trust and reverence.—Pul. Com.

The Composition of the Law of God.—There is a bell in the cathedral of Cologne, made by the melting together of French cannon. It would have been a very difficult task, indeed, to analyze the bell and determine whence the cannon came. Something like this, however, is the task before those who adopt the extreme theories of the rationalistic critics of the Pentateuch. You must be supposed to show in the minute literary traits of this series of documents the dates of their origin, the dates of their combination, and the dates of subsequent editorial supervisions. Even if it were to be granted that documents drawn from many polytheistic nations and ages were the original constituents of the Pentateuch, we have not touched the doctrine of the inspiration of the combined mass at all. The mass is strangely purified from all false doctrine. A Divine fire has burned all adulterate elements wholly out of it, and fused the constituents in a combination wholly new. These cannon are one set of objects; melted together into a bell, hung in a cathedral tower, they are another object altogether. Mere white dust is one thing; compacted into marble, in a vase, it has a ring, and is quite another. These cannon, melted and hung aloft in the form of a bell, are no longer cannon. They are an inspired work. It is our business, indeed, to know all we can as to the composition of this bronze; but our highest business is to ring the bell in the cathedral tower. The moral law, and the ethical monotheism of the Pentateuch, have proved their resonance as often as they have been put in practice, age after age. The Pentateuch hung in the cathedral tower of the world has uttered God's voice, and it is our business to ask how we can ring the bell in the heights of history, rather than how it originated by the melting together of many fragments. —Joseph Cook.

7, 9. (7) deny, or withhold not from me. before I die, or, as long as I live. (8) vanity, etc., with special reference to vain speculations and lying assumptions of special knowledge. He wants the spirit of contentment, that he may be kept within the limits of revelation. poverty, etc.,[a] a wise limitation of his circumstances would be in harmony with the wise limitation of his thinking. convenient, or a necessary, appointed portion. Comp. our Lord's prayer, "Give us this day our daily bread." (9) deny thee, in self-satisfaction and luxurious enjoyment. [b]take the [b] Comp. Jno. iii. 13; Is. xl. 12; Ro. x. 6, 7.

[c] "Or, reference may be 'to the upper mass of waters, wrapped in the clouds of heaven as in a capacious garment, and so kept back from pouring down upon the earth.'"—O. Zockler.

[d] Re. xix. 12.

"We are but of yesterday and know nothing. Tomorrow is the secret of time, which the wisest man can only guess at." —Parker.

[e] Heb. tseruphah, purified and refined in fire.

"Look not for another master, thou hast the oracles of God. No one teaches like them. Ignorance of the Scriptures is the cause of all evils." — Chrysostom.

"The first and almost the only book deserving universal attention is the Bible. It is a book which neither the most ignorant and weakest, nor the most learned and intelligent mind, can read without improvement."—John Quincy Adams.

"I know the Bible is inspired, because it finds me at greater depths of my being than any other book." — Coleridge.

[a] "One staff will help a man on his way, but a bundle of staves would burden and weary him." —Abp. Leighton.

[b] "Lest I assail God's name or attributes, as justice, mercy, etc., which the poor are tempted to do."—Fausset.

1 Ti. vi. 6, 10; 1 Jno. ii. 16.

"To be truly and really independent, is to support ourselves by our own exertions." —Porter.

"Richer than doing nothing for a bauble; prouder than rustling in unpaid-for silk."—Shakespeare.

c Ps. x. 7.

"Make not a slave to accuse his master." So rend. Bertheau, Hitzig, etc.

"In a word, ingratitude is too base to return a kindnes ,and too proud to regard it; much like the tops of mountains, barren indeed, but yet lofty; they produce nothing, they feed nobody, they clothe nobody, yet are high and stately, and look down upon all the world about them."—South.

a Young men of that black character commonly herd together, and irritate one another against their parents.

b Lu. xviii. 11.

c Of some sins we are not sensible, because they are habitual, wh. very circumstance is an aggravation of their guilt.

"Solon, when asked why he had made no law against parricides, replied that he could not conceive of anyone so impious and cruel. The divine lawgiver knew that man's heart was capable of wickedness beyond conception."
—Bridges.

"Early impressions are not easily erased; the virgin wax is faithful to the signet, and subsequent impressions seem rather to indent the former ones name, etc., in view of the proverbs that follow, this clause may best be taken of the blasphemy attending on impatience and want of resignation to the Divine will. Comp. Isa. viii. 21.

The Prayer of Agur (vss. 7—9).—I. It was short—long and short prayers. II. It was comprehensive—two petitions—for his soul grace, for his body suitable food. III. It was spiritual—against excessive wealth and pinching poverty. IV. It was wise—proceeding from an accurate and judicious survey of the moral effects produced by the different conditions of human life. The rich and the poor have their peculiar temptations. V. It was believing. It breathes a fine spirit of dependence upon God. VI. It was moderate—the golden mean.—G. Brooks.

10. Accuse, Heb. "Hurt not with thy tongue." Slander not.[c] Do not increase by useless suspicion the burdens of the lowly. curse thee, turn on thee, and tell of thy wrong doings. Masters and mistresses should be very careful of listening to reports about their servants; and men should take heed and not spoil the harmony of family life and social relations.

Malicious Accusations.—There are men in society who seem to live like beasts of prey. As the lion or the tiger is ever watching his opportunity to spring upon some defenceless creature at an unguarded moment, so these men seem to make it their business to watch their fellow-creatures for opportunities to injure their reputation and mangle their character. And in a world of faulty human beings, it is not difficult for such men to find food for their malicious appetites, without transgressing the limits of truth. In most men there is enough imperfection, and in many of actual sin, to render it easy to make out a case against them. But if no actual good can come to anybody by exposing their failings, much harm will come to the man who thus bears witness against them without a cause. The evil tendencies of his own evil nature will be strengthened by the act, and he will be exposing himself to the danger of having a causeless testimony borne against himself in his turn.—Hom. Com.

11—14. (11) generation, or class of people.[a] curseth . . mother, are abusive to their parents. The lawless. (12) pure, etc., the hypocrites, such as the Pharisee who boasted of his goodness in his prayer.[b] "It is of the essence of this temper that its hypocrisy is unconscious."[c] (13) lofty, etc., the proud and arrogant. The attitude characteristic of the proud is vigorously sketched. (14) teeth, etc., the avariciously cruel.

The Self-deceiver Exposed (vs. 12).—Among the generation of self-deceivers we must number—I. The decent formalist: he is pure in his own eyes, he is not washed from his filthiness. II. The almost Christian: he goes much farther than the formalist, but, like him, he deceiveth his own soul. III. The inconsistent professor: who more confident of the goodness of his state than he who professes to believe in Christ, but who more open to self-deception? Address—1. Those who, though pure in their own eyes, are not washed; 2. Those who, though not pure in their own eyes, are really washed from their filthiness.—C. Simeon.

Not My Mother!—Well, do you see, at night we used to amuse each other by telling our tricks, urging one another on in daring vice and wickedness. Amongst us we had one uncommon bright girl—a first rate mimic, and she used to make us roar with laughter. Well, this fun had been going on for weeks; she had gone through most of her characters, from the governor to the turnkey, when she starts on a new tack, and commenced taking off Parson Cowper and Father Therry; some way it did not take, so she went back to Newgate and took off Mrs. Fry to the very life, but it would not do; we did not seem to enjoy it—there was no fun in it for us. So then, she began about the ships leaving, and our mother's crying, and begging of us to turn over a new leaf; and then, in mimicking, jesting sport, she sobbed and bade us good-bye. Well, how it happened I know not, but one after the other we began to cry, and say, "Stay, not my mother! Not my mother!" Said one: "Let Mrs. Fry alone; Father Therry must not be brought here, nor Parson Cowper —stay, stay!" Well, she did stop, but tears were shed the whole of that night. Everything had been tried with me; good people had sought in vain to convince me of my evil ways; but that girl's ridicule of my mother I could not stand! Her grief was brought home to me, and not to me alone, but to many. I do believe that night was a great blessing to many. I was so unhappy that the next day I tried to get out of sight to pray; and when I got to a hiding place I found three girls on their knees. We comforted each other, and then how we spoke of our mothers! Mine was dead; she left this world believing me past hope—but the picture of her grief made me earnest in search of that peace which endureth forever.—Journal of Prison Discipline.

15—17. (15) horseleech, the leech fastens with the utmost tenacity on the mouths of cattle or legs of travelers, and is used as an emblem of the eager desire that nothing can satisfy. R. V. marg. "vampire." "This is an imaginary spectre or ghost in popular mythology, wh. sucks human blood, specially that of children, and is insatiable for it."—Stuart. two daughters, "that wh. is characteristic of the creature, its voracious appetite, is here represented as its daughters." enough, i.e. there are four things wh. have the characteristic of insatiability. (16) filled with water, such earth will take any quantity of rain. (17) eye, chief organ for expressing mockery and contempt. ravens, wh. are still found in the ravines and valleys of Syria.[a]

Dr. Adam Clarke.—The late Dr. Adam Clarke, when but a little boy, one day disobeyed his mother, and the disobedience was accompanied with some look or gesture that indicated an undervaluing of her authority. This was a high affront; she immediately took up the Bible, and opened on these words (Prov. xxx. 17), which she read and commented on in a most solemn manner: "The eye that mocketh at his father, and despiseth to obey his mother, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out, and the young eagles shall eat it." The poor culprit was cut to the heart, believing the words had been sent immediately from heaven: he went out into the fields with a troubled spirit, and was musing on this terrible denunciation of Divine displeasure, when the hoarse croak of a raven sounded to his conscience an alarm more dreadful than the cry of fire at midnight! He looked up, and soon perceived this most ominous bird, and actually supposing it to be the raven of which the text spoke, coming to pick out his eyes, he clapped his hands on them, and with the utmost speed and trepidation ran towards the house, as fast as his alarm and perturbation would admit, that he might escape the impending vengeance!—R. T. S.

18—20. (18) too wonderful, beyond my tracing so as fully to explain. (19) way, or path: in each of the things here mentioned no such trace is left as may enable the course taken to be detected. midst, or heart. man . . maid, the sin of unchastity is signified, which demands secrecy and affords no token of its commission.—Pul. Com. (20) done no wickedness, bec. none can point out the signs of the wrong, she brazenly denies it.[a]

The Four Teachers (vss. 18, 19).—Many things became to Agur the inlets of wise reflection. I. An eagle in the air; that sublime thing, overcoming, walking, on the wings of the wind, sailing through the thunderstorm, living where the lightnings play, able to gaze on the sun. II. A serpent: that long, cruel creature, its coils, its rapid spring, its strange interlocking of vertebræ. III. Man imitating nature; the way of a ship, that dead yet living bird of art and science; art has nothing more graceful, more amazingly buoyant and natural. IV. More wonderful than all other, relation of hearts. How two people who never saw each other, meet, and how a lifelong relationship rises, so that if one heart is torn from the other the survivor pines and almost dies.—E. Paxton Hood.

The Flight of the Eagle.—Great as are the distances which these birds sometimes fly, it becomes comprehensible when we know that an eagle, as he sweeps freely through the air, traverses a space of sixty feet in a second of time. To be able thus rapidly to move along is undoubtedly an attribute of power; but there is something far more imposing, far more majestic, in that calm onward motion, when, with wings outspread and quite still, the mighty bird floats buoyantly in the atmosphere, upheld and borne along by the act of mere volition. The length of time he can thus remain suspended without a single beat of his broad, shadowy pinions, is to me still an inexplicable fact. He will sail forward in a perfectly horizontal direction for a distance of more than a mile, without the slightest quiver of a feather giving sign that the wings are moved.

than to eradicate them."—Colton.

"'Tis but instruction, all! Our parent's hand writes on our heart the first faint characters; which time, retracing, deepens into strength, that nothing can efface but death or Heaven."—Aaron Hill.

[a] Ref. would be either to the unnatural death of such unnatural children, or to the fact that they should lie unburied, men being unwilling to give them the respect shown in decent burial.

"If I had no other reason and motive for being religious I would earnestly strive to be so for the sake of my aged mother, that I might requite her care of me, and cause the widow's heart to sing for joy."—Hooker.

Bochart asserts that the "two daughters" signify Hades and the grave, which are never satisfied.

[a] "The soul wh. has revolted from the heavenly Bridegroom thinks that it can wash away its pollution by its own hands, and it justifies itself in its own eyes."—Wordsworth.

"Beasts, birds, and insects even to the minutest and meanest of their kind, act with the unerring providence of instinct; man, the while, who possesses a higher faculty, abuses it, and therefore goes blundering on. They, by their unconscious and unhesitating obedience to the laws of nature, fulfil the end of their existence;

he, in wilful neglect of the laws of God, loses sight of the end of his." —Southey.

"Instinct is that power of volition or impulse produced by the peculiar nature of an animal which prompts it to do certain things independent of all instruction or experience and without deliberation, where such act is immediately connected with its own individual preservation or with that of its kind." —Maunder.

[b] A silly, rude, boisterous vicious man.

[a] An ill-natured, cross-grained woman.

[b] Or persuades her mistress to leave her her money.

Provs. "The lion had need of the mouse." — English.

—"Every ten years, one man has need of another."— Italian.

[c] Le. xi. 5; Ps. civ. 18.

[d] Is. xxxiii. 4.

"Man's instincts are elevated and ennobled by the moral ends and purposes of his being. He is not destined to be the slave of blind impulses, a vessel purposeless, unmeant. He is constituted by his moral and intelligent will to be the first freed being, the masterwork and the end of nature; but this freedom and high office can only co-exist with fealty and devotion to the service of truth and virtue." — Mat. Greene.

"Vain man! to be so fond of breathing long, and spinning out a thread of misery. The longer

Not less extraordinary is the power the bird possesses of arresting himself instantaneously at a certain spot and dropping through the air with folded wings from a height of three or four thousand feet. When circling so high up that he shows but as a dot, he will suddenly close both wings, and, falling like an aerolite, pass through the intervening space in a few seconds of time. With a burst his broad pinions are again unfolded, his downward progress is arrested, and he sweeps away horizontally, smoothly, and without effort. He has been seen to do this when carrying a sheep of twenty pounds' weight in his talons; and from so giddy a height that both the eagle and his booty were not larger than a sparrow. It was directly over a wall of rock in which the eyrie was built; and while the speck in the clouds was being examined, and doubts entertained as to the possibility of its being the eagle, down he came headlong, every instant increasing in size, when, in passing the precipice, out flew his mighty wings, the sheep was flung into the nest, and on the magnificent creature moved, calmly and unflurried, as a barque sails gently down the stream of a river.

21—23. (21) is disquieted, R. V., "doth tremble." cannot bear, they are things intolerable; "by them the state of nations and the world is turned upside down." (22) reigneth, becomes king. fool[b] . . meat, or those who are worthless and yet are prospered and honored. The profligate rich man is almost always haughty and cruel. (23) odious, unlovable: one worthy of hate.[a] One who when married triumphs insolently over others. heir, etc., takes her place as a wife.[b] These are "odious incongruities."

Intolerable Things.—I. The examples. 1. The slave in authority. 2. The self-satisfied fool. 3. The ill-tempered wife. 4. The ambitious maid-servant. II. The general lessons. Order and rank are Divine institutions. To overturn this is no work of the true reformer or friend of the social weal. Rule rests ultimately upon ability to rule; government, upon power; authority, upon wisdom. When these relations are actually reversed, society is disturbed, matters are unhappy. When they only seem to be reversed, there will be distress and discomfort in right minds, until the just order and the nominal state of things shall be restored.—Johnson.

24—28. (24) wise, specially here the wonderful instinct of the creatures is referred to. Wise here means "quick of wit." (25) ants, ch. vi. 6—8. Their collective and organized action is very striking. prepare, R. V., "provide," their foresight is specially noticed. This is only true of some kinds of ants. (26) conies,[c] either field-mice or rabbits. (27) by bands, in masses, under some kind of organization.[d] (28) spider . . hands, R. V. marg. "The lizard thou canst seize with thy hands, yet is she," etc.

Spiritual Diligence a Source of Happiness (vss. 24—28).—Let us take a general view of the whole passage, and notice the great moral truths which it teaches. I. That we ought to act according to the whole of our nature,—they do so. II. That we ought to secure all the happiness of which our nature is susceptible,—they do so. 1. God has provided happiness for every nature, and for every nature its own happiness; 2. Man's happiness is to be obtained in connection with its own activity; 3. We ought not to be satisfied without obtaining all the happiness which the Divine mercy has provided for us.—Caleb Morris.

True Wisdom.—The whole study becomes an argument. If God has given such wisdom to insects, how much more will he give to men? They cannot ask for any more: we are urged to speak to him to give us further supplies. "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not." Then if we are not wise, whose blame is it? It is not God's blame. He waits to communicate, he loves to give. An ungiving God! That would be a monstrosity of paganism,—a degradation of mythology itself. We are called to asking, to prayer, to pleading, that the volume of our being may be increased, that our spiritual graces may be multiplied, and that all that is divine in us may be enhanced and confirmed. No man can be wise without this union with God. He may have devoured whole libraries, but he is not wise. If God so commends the right use of instinct, how will he complain of the abuse of reason! Men are sent to the ants to learn diligence. They are sent to the conies to learn that there is a way which terminates in a great rock. They are sent to the locusts to learn how littles, when combined, may become mighty, sufficient for all the duty and obligation of the day. What if it be found at the last that all the lower orders and ranks of creation have been obedient, dutiful, loyal,—and that man only has wounded the great heart?—Parker.

29—31. (29) go well, R. V. "are stately in their march." (30) lion, comp. his movement with that of tiger. (31) greyhound, poss. should be a horse. Lit. "one with loins girded;" with allusion to stately trappings of the war-horse. he-goat, the leader of a large Oriental flock of goats, marching along with great dignity. king, in his state robes. against . . up, R. V. marg. "when his army is with him."

Moffat and the Lion.—"At Sitlagole River," says Mr. Moffat, in his Missionary Labours and Scenes, "about a hundred and sixty miles from the Kuruman, we halted in the afternoon, and allowed our oxen to graze on a rising bank opposite our waggons, and somewhat farther than a gunshot from them. Having but just halted, and not having loosened a gun, we were taken by surprise by two lions rushing out from a neighboring thicket. The oldest one, of enormous size, approached within ten yards of the oxen, and bounding on one of my best, killed him in a moment, by sending his great teeth through the vertebræ of the neck. The younger lion couched at the distance, while the other licked his prey, turning his head occasionally towards the other oxen, which had caught his scent and scampered off; then, with his forefeet upon the carcase, he looked and roared at us, who were all in a scuffle to loosen our guns and attack his majesty. Two of our number, more eager to frighten than to kill, discharged their muskets; and probably a ball whistling past his ear induced him to retire to the thicket whence he had come, leaving us in quiet possession of the meat."

32, 33. (32) lay . . mouth, the sign of humiliation.[a] (33) forcing, or pressing.[b] forcing . . strife, "if one urges and presses hard on an angry man, the consequence of such a course is a quarrel."—Stuart.

Count Cavour and Garibaldi.—Bixio rose to speak in the name of concord and Italy. He said he was Italian above all things. He had faith in Garibaldi! but he also trusted the patriotism of Count Cavour. "Gentlemen, I have a beloved family at home. Gentlemen, I would willingly give that family and my own self to be able to join the hands of these two great men,—bring them to forget and forgive. Parties, gentlemen, are ruining us; they disgrace us; we must forget and forgive." This blunt but hearty eloquence went home to every man's soul. After Bixio's speech, another outbreak would have been impossible.—The Times.

CHAPTER THE THIRTY-FIRST.

1—3. (1) Lemuel,[c] some take Lemuel as a symbolical name, designating an ideal king to whom an ideal mother speaks as follows.—Pul. Com. Stuart translates: "The words of Lemuel, king of Massa; which his mother taught him." (2) What, my son? shall I advise thee: the language of emphasis. son . . vows, one dedicated to God. (3) strength, bodily vigor, wh. is soon wasted by the indulgences of vice. destroyeth, enervates: plucks away the physical and the mental energy and causes premature death and decay of dynasties.

A Mother's Counsel.—I. It springs from a woman's nature. II. It is inspired by a mother's heart. III. It is characterized by unselfish devotion. IV. It is guided by deep knowledge. V. It cannot be neglected without cruel ingratitude.—Pulp. Com.

Mothers.—We have seen that mothers were regarded with great veneration in the East. The mothers of kings were treated with great distinction, and were known as "queen-mothers." We have seen that they were not always good women; on the contrary, some of them seem to have been inspired by the very spirit of evil. The mothers of Jewish kings are constantly mentioned in the Bible. It has been noticed as characteristic of Oriental courtesy that the mother of the Khedive ranks life, the greater choice of evil." —Young.

Some years since, several persons saw a young man approach the river Seine, in Paris, with the intention of drowning his dog. Having rowed into the stream, he threw the dog into the water. The poor creature attempted to crawl up the side of the boat, but his cruel master always pushed him back with the oars. In doing this, he himself fell into the water and would certainly have been drowned, had not his faithful dog instantly laid hold of him, and kept him above water till assistance arrived, when his life was saved.

"Live as long as you may, the first twenty years are the longest half of your life." —Southey.

[a] Comp. Job xxi. 5, xxix. 9, xl. 4.

[b] "The Oriental mode of churning by squeezing and wringing a leathern bag or bottle that contains the milk, makes more apparent and vivid the meaning of this comparison." — Thomson.

[c] Lemuel means to God, or more fully, dedicated to God.

"The ways of licentiousness are here intended, wh. ruin physically and morally kings and princes who give themselves up to them."—O. Zockler.

"The fear of God is the leading thought in these meditations; and this in a twofold relation — to the king in his rule in the state, and the woman in her rule in the house." — Pul. Con.

before his principal wife. It would seem then as if mothers were the orators of their families,—teaching, exhorting, and stimulating them with many words of kindness and wisdom. The mother was indeed the schoolmistress of her family, the governess in the best sense, not looking merely after their bodily health and social comforts, but after the training and culture of their noblest nature.—Parker.

4—7. (4) strong drink, reference is made here to drinking habits, wh. loosen the self-restraint, and destroy the faculty of clear judgment.[a] "Strong drink was distilled from barley, or honey, or dates." (5) pervert, alter, so as to injure the poor as a class or individually. (6) heavy hearts, R. V., "bitter of soul." The medicinal use of such stimulants seems to have been recognized. "It was a Jewish custom to give a cup of wine to mourners."[b]

Fidelity to Principle.—An officer in the American army, who had some business to transact with General Washington, was invited to dine with him. Just before dinner was concluded, Washington called him by name, and requested him to drink a glass of wine with him. "You will have the goodness to excuse me, General," was the reply, "as I have made it a rule not to take wine." The eyes of a numerous company, of both sexes, were instantly turned upon the young officer, and expressions of disapprobation appeared on all sides. Washington, observing the feelings of his company, thus addressed them:—"Gentlemen, Mr. —— is right. I do not wish any of my guests to partake of anything against their inclination, and I certainly do not wish them to violate any established principle in their social intercourse with me. I honor Mr. —— for his frankness, for his consistency in thus adhering to an established rule which can never do him harm, and for the adoption of which, I have no doubt, he has good and sufficient reasons."—Whitecross.

8, 9. (8) appointed, etc.,[c] lit. "children of bereavement:" those destined to, or in danger of, the loss of their goods. It is king's work to defend and plead for such. Or ref. may be to helpless, orphaned children. (9) judge righteously, R. V., "minister judgment," Le. xix. 15; De. i. 16.

A Judge above Resentment.—In the latter half of the last century the lord justice clerk of Scotland, who had a fine avenue of trees leading to his country house, though not growing on ground which he could call his own, happened to displease the proprietor, who caused all the trees to be cut down. The damage was irreparable, but his lordship, who was of a mild and amiable disposition, submitted to it in silence. Two or three years afterward, it happened that this laird's whole estate was put in jeopardy by the next heir-at-law producing a will, which, though it had long lain dormant, appeared so plain and genuine, that the laird nearly gave up his right; and abandoned all hope, when he found it must be decided by the man he had so deeply injured. The strict integrity of the judge was, however, a sufficient guarantee that justice would be impartially administered. The judge, when the cause came before him, sifted it with indefatigable industry and zeal for public justice, when he discovered the will was a forgery; and thus, contrary to all expectation, the laird gained his cause. He then waited on the judge with shame and confusion, and acknowledged that he would never have recovered the suit had it not been for his lordship, as his own counsel had given it up. "You have nothing to thank me for," said the judge, "but my having taken due pains to do you justice. This was a duty I owed to myself, and I should have been unworthy of the place I occupy if I suffered any injury done to myself to influence me in the administration of justice."—Percy Anec.

10—12. (10) virtuous,[a] not merely chaste, but including moral strength, uprightness, cultured and noble character, fitness for domestic duties, etc. her price, or value. rubies, better, pearls. (11) safely trust, this is unusual; husbands in the E. generally trust locks and keys. need of spoil,[b] R. V., "no lack of gain." The results of honest labor being wisely and well expended at home, no need arises for unlawful schemes for raising money. (12) do him good, in every sense, moral and intellectual good, as well as temporal. She fears to do anything that may turn to his prejudice. all . . life, in adversity as well as prosperity this wife loves and cherishes her husband.

a 'Stimulants enfeeble reason and pervert the heart, and do not suit rulers, who need clear and steady minds, and well-governed affections."—Fausset.

b Ps. civ. 15.

"Is he a fanatic who warns the young man to abstain from wines and strong drink? Such exhortation is based on the highest psychology and physiology; for the good man sees that every passion that strays away in illicit directions carries the mind with it into captivity."—Parker.

c Ruined by their oppressors.

"To send the injured unredressed away how great soe er the offender, and the wrong'd howe'er obscure, is wicked, weak and vile, — degrades, defiles, and should dethrone a king." —Smollet.

The greatest pleasure of life is love; the greatest treasure contentment; the greatest possession health; the greatest ease sleep; and the best medicine a true friend.

"The injustice of men subserves the justice of God, and often His mercy." — Madame Swetchine.

a Pr. xii. 4.

b "A strong expression to describe the rich profit to which the co-operation of the efficient wife helps her husband's activity in his occupation." — O. Zockler.

A Perfect Home.—The most perfect little home I ever saw was a little house into the sweet incense of whose fires went no costly things. A thousand dollars served as a year's living for father, mother, and three children. But the mother was a creator of a home; her relations with the children were the most beautiful I have ever seen; every inmate of the house involuntarily looked into her face for the keynote of the day, and it always rang clear. From the rosebud or clover-leaf, which, in spite of her hard housework, she always found time to put beside our plates at breakfast, down to the story she had on hand to read in the evening, there was no intermission of her influence. She has always been and always will be my ideal of a mother, wife, and home-maker. If to her quick brain, loving heart, and exquisite face had been added the appliances of wealth and enlargements of wide culture, hers would have been absolutely the ideal home. As it was, it was the best I have ever seen.—H. H. Jackson.

13, 14. (13) wool and flax, "in Sidon, at this day, a majority of the women are thus working in raw silk and cotton, instead of wool and flax. The produce is sold to merchants who come from afar."—Thomson. with her hands, so we are taught that handicraft is not unworthy of princesses.[c] "The most distinguished queens of the ancient time excelled in the art of spinning."—Bushnell. (14) food from afar, either by selling to foreign merchants, or by carefully finding out the best markets, though they may be distant ones. Comp. vs. 24.

A Good Wife.—A good wife is heaven's last best gift to man; his angel of mercy; minister of graces innumerable; his gem of many virtues; his casket of jewels; her voice, his sweetest music; her smiles, his brightest day; her kiss, the guardian of his innocence; her arms, the pale of his safety, the balm of his health, the balsam of his life; her industry, his surest wealth; her economy, his safest steward; her lips, his faithful counselors; her bosom, the softest pillow of his cares; and her prayers, the ablest advocates of heaven's blessing on his head.—Jeremy Taylor.

15—17. (15) riseth . . night, in the E. the industrious are usually very early risers. In hot countries early morning is the best time for work. meat, or rations of food. portion, or allotment of work. If the wife had to start them forth into the fields, she would need to arrange the work and food for each. Doing this early prevented the servants wasting their time. (16) buyeth it, by the produce of her own labor she even adds to the property of the family. vineyard, she plants vines in this field she buys.[a] (17) girdeth, etc., the girdle being an important article of dress, and especially tightened in prepartion for work. She is active and energetic.

An Old Proverb Verified (vss. 15—17).—"Early to bed," etc. We have here—I. An early riser. 1. This good for body and mind; 2. A corrective of lazy and luxurious habits; 3. House in order for early meals, work, and worship. II. A careful housewife. If the mistress rises late waste comes of servants helping themselves, or they imitate her example of idleness. III. She is a thoughtful bargainer—considers before she buys. IV. She enjoys good health, in great measure the result of good habits and thoughtfulness, as she promotes early rising, cleanliness, industry, and economy.

Industry.—Industry doth not consist merely in action, for that is incessant in all persons; our mind being like a ship in the sea, if not steered to some good purpose by reason, yet tossed by the waves of fancy, or driven by the winds of temptation some-whither; but the direction of our mind to some good end, without roving or flinching, in a straight and steady course, drawing after it our active powers in execution thereof, doth constitute industry.—Barrow.

18—20. (18) perceiveth, tastes, discerns, finds out that it is good thus to labor and sell the produce of her labor, and so finds new incentives. good, R. V. "profitable." candle . . night, Thompson says that in the E. the very poorest people even keep a light burning all through the night, in fear of night-dangers.[b] (19) distaff, referred to in vs. 13.[c] Lit. the whorl, or wheel. (20) stretcheth . . hand, her open palm. Her hollow or bent hand, holding some gift.[d] She has no fear that generosity will issue in poverty.

"All other goods by fortune's hand are given;
A wife is the peculiar gift of Heaven."—Pope.

"If women be good, the half of the commonwealth may be happy where they are."—Aristotle.

c Lit. "And laboreth with her hand's pleasure," or, "and laboreth in the business of her hands."

It is reported of Augustus himself, at the height of the Roman splendor, that he wore a robe which was made for him by Livia, his wife.

a "She does this with what she can spare out of the gains of her own housewifery. Men should not lay out anything upon superfluities, till, by the blessing of God upon their industry, they have got beforehand, and can afford it; and then the fruit of the vineyard is likely to be doubly sweet, when it is the fruit of honest industry."—Mat. Henry.

b The idea of this vs. may be that, estimating the value of her merchandise, she takes care to watch over it well during the darkness of the night.

c "the distaff was held in one hand, or under one arm, and the spindle, hanging by the thread, was occasionally hit and twirled by the other. The weaving process was equally rude and simple." —Bushnell.

d "The industry is not selfish, but bears the fruit of an open-handed charity." —Spk. Com.

As if one hand were not enough for her it is said she reacheth forth her hands; and if she had more than two no doubt she would reach them all forth to the poor.—Jermin.

The Most Beautiful Hands.—There is an old legend, says the Sunday Magazine, concerning three young women who disputed as to who had the most beautiful hands. One dipped her hands into the pure running stream, another picked berries until her fingers were pink, a third gathered roses until her hands were made sweet by their fragrance. An aged woman, careworn and decrepit, leaning upon her staff, came asking a gift, but all alike refused her. A fourth young woman, making no claims to beauty, ministered unto her needs. The aged woman then said: "It is not the hand that is dipped in the brook, nor the hand made red with berries, nor the hand garlanded or perfumed with roses, that is most beautiful, but the hand that giveth to the poor." As she thus spoke her mask fell off, her staff was cast aside, her wrinkles vanished, and she stood before them an angel of God. It matters not whether the hand gives in money or whether it gives in sympathetic acts; whether it gives much or little, it is all given unto Christ. In some cases, money would be quite useless, whilst kindness is priceless.

21—23. (21) snow, the indication of cold weather, for wh. clothing should be adapted. scarlet, the warm color, put here for warm clothing. (22) coverings, i.e. "carpets" or "cushions." silk,[a] better, fine linen, the byssus of Egypt. (23) known, i.e. observed, as a singularly well-cared-for man. "The husband of such a wife is distinguished among his compeers by a costume clean, whole, and handsome, and a countenance contented and happy."[b]

A Perfect Woman.—
Within the home she rules with quiet might,
By virtue of her perfect womanhood;
A child in years, but with all grace and good Enshrined in her truth-flashing orbs of light.
A woman strong and firm to do the right,
Who with the old-time martyrs might have stood,
Yet full of sympathy with ev'ry mood,
In times of trouble cheery still and bright;
O queen of maidens! it must surely be,
If ought that to perfection cometh near
Can e'er be found in this imperfect life,
You, perfect daughter, will but disappear
To shine as perfect mother, perfect wife.—G. Weatherby.

a "Scarlet, purple, tapestry and embroidery are still the favorite colors and patterns of Oriental taste." — Thomson.

b "'Tis meet for thee to sit among the princes and hold thy council, with thy body clad in raiment fair and clean."—Homer.

"She may safely wear elegant garments, who in character and bearing is elegant without their aid. If honor be your clothing, the suit will last a life-time, but if clothing be your honor, it will soon be worn threadbare."
—Arnot.

24—26. (24) fine linen, R. V., "linen garments," the word used here indicates not the material, but the made-up garments.[c] merchant, lit. "Canaanite," or the Phœnician merchant. (25) rejoice, etc., "She laugheth at the time to come," in reliance on her stores and her skill. The evil day finds her provided for. (26) openeth . . wisdom, her conversation to her household is sensible. law of kindness,[d] she rules, but with due consideration and tenderness. "She was too rich in love for envies, too noble for jealousies, too confiding for suspicions, too truthful for falsehood, too good for scandal."

c Isa. iii. 23.

d "Her wisdom and kindness together put a commanding power into all she says; they command respect; they command compliance." — Mat. Henry.

1 Ti. ii. 8-10; 1 Pe. iii. 3, 4.

"The very word kindness comes from the cognate word kinned, that is, one of the same kin or race; acknowledging and reminding us of the fact that all men are brethren—all of the same blood—and therefore they should all act as brethren. All who are of the same kindred should be kind."
—Bowes.

A Good Wife's Future Joy.—I. The provision for this joy: her character, habits. II. The subject of this joy: her home, children, husband, prosperity. III. The nature of it: her children, etc. The joy of rest and reward in advanced life, the favor of God, joy in anticipation of the future life.—A Good Woman's Tongue.—It is marked by—I. Wisdom: she does not prate of things beyond her sphere; has good advice for her daughter and her husband. II. Kindness: she is no scold, or loud-voiced woman; her words are full of tenderness, love, truth, cheerful piety.

The Power of Kindness.—A horse passing down the street in a stage suddenly stood still, and refused to go. He put down his forefoot and became as stubborn as a mule. The driver beat him with great severity, but the animal still refused to go. Finally, a respectable person, a passer-by, picked up a little hay and put it before the horse. He ate it, and the friend kindly patted him on the neck and coaxed him. In a minute or two the stubbornness was gone, and the horse, with driver, were on their way. So let parents, masters, teachers, ministers, try the hand and food of kindness with all stubborn souls with whom they may have to do. —John Bate.

27—29. (27) bread of idleness, leaving others to do her duty. (28) blessed, bec. of her earnest labors on their behalf, and because of her gracious influence upon them. (29) thou, the ideal person described. Or this may be the exclamation of the grateful, trustful husband.

Faithfulness.—But what will avail all eloquent description? The portrait of a true woman is drawn, not to be admired, but to be reproduced in living character. It will be a grievous mistake to suppose that nothing that is less than heroic is to be attempted either by men or women. We deceive ourselves when we think that if some great occasion would arise we should be equal to the sublime opportunity, but it is not worth our while to attend to daily tasks and little services and small occasions. Here the rule holds good as elsewhere, "He that is faithful in little is faithful also in much." Every man or woman can find a sphere of usefulness if disposed to find it. What a school may the house become; what a church of the living God is the family; within the four walls of a home what battles may be fought, what victories may be won! Each should consider what he can do to contribute towards the general weal. A gracious word, a tender look, an assurance of sympathy, how far these go, and what miracles they work! How they abide in the memory; how they enable the soul to sing in the night-time; how full they are of divine encouragement!—Exp. B.

30, 31. (30) Favour, grace of person. deceitful, it may hide really unworthy character. beauty, of countenance. vain, bec. not lasting. It passes with the advancing years, and sad is that woman's lot who has only her beauty to depend upon. feareth the Lord, piety in the home is everything.[a] "The fear of the Lord is the condition of all womanly as well as manly excellence." (31) fruit . . hands, which is the praise due to a skilful, diligent, and faithful wife.

Feminine Beauty (vs. 30).—I. It is attractive while it lasts. II. With some it lasts to old age; the beauty of such women then. III. The thoughtless have eyes for physical beauty only. IV. Beauty often provokes vanity, and is vain to charm the minds of others who at length discover nothing beneath it. V. Seek that beauty that comes of piety, beauty of heart, and mind, and life, these really promote beauty of person.

Beauty.—Hearing a young lady highly praised for her beauty, Gotthold asked, "What kind of beauty do you mean? Merely that of the body, or that also of the mind? I see well that you have been looking no further than the sign which nature displays outside the house, but have never asked for the host who dwells within. Beauty is an excellent gift of God, nor has the pen of the Holy Spirit forgotten to speak its praise; but it is virtuous and godly beauty alone which Scripture honors, expressly declaring, on the other hand, that a fair woman which is without discretion is as a jewel of gold in a swine's snout (Prov. xi. 22). Many a pretty girl is like the flower called the imperial crown, which is admired, no doubt, for its showy appearance, but despised for its unpleasant odor. Were her mind as free from pride, selfishness, luxury, and levity, as her countenance from spots and wrinkles, and could she govern her inward inclinations as she does her external carriage, she would have none to match her. But who loves the caterpillar and such insects, however showy their appearance, and bright and variegated the colors that adorn them, seeing they injure and defile the trees and plants on which they settle? What the better is an apple for its rosy skin, if the maggot have penetrated and devoured its heart? What care I for the beautiful brown of the nut, if it be worm-eaten, and fill the mouth with corruption? Even so external beauty of person deserves no praise, unless matched with the inward beauty of virtue and holiness. It is therefore far better to acquire beauty than to be born with it. The best kind is that which does not wither at the touch of fever, like a flower, but lasts and endures on a bed of sickness, in old age, and even unto death." Is it beauty that you are proud of? I have told you what sickness and death will do to that before. "When God rebuketh man for sin, He maketh his beauty to consume away as a moth; surely every man is vanity. "And if your beauty would continue, how little good will it do you? and who but fools do look at the skin of a rational creature, when they would discern its worth?—Baxter.

"A woman's tongue is her sword, and she does not let it rust."—Chinese.

"A lamp is lit in woman's eye, that souls else lost on earth remember angels by."—N. P. Willis.

"Say the world what it will, a drachm of holiness is worth a pound of good nature."—Trapp.

"Of every woman the highest praise is that 'She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.' There is the epitome of all trustworthy and honorable character."— R. F. Horton.

[a] "As an imperishable and therefore really praiseworthy possession, there is contrasted with favor and beauty the disposition to fear God."—O. Zockler.

"If husbands and wives are each reconciled unto God in Christ, and so heirs of life and one with God, then are they truly one in God, and that is the surest and sweetest union that can be."—Abp. Leighton.

"A woman distinguished for her modesty, meekness, and prudence, and other virtues, will engage affection and respect when other accomplishments fade and decline."

"Beauty, what is it, but a dash of nature's tincture laid upon the skin, which is soon washed off with a little sickness? What, but a fair blossom which, with one hot sun-gleam weltereth and falls?"
—Hall.

INDEX I.

SUBJECTS.

[Index of archæological notes, etymologies and quotations in the margin, and of all in the body of the comment except anecdotes and illustrative matter.]

PAGE

Abaddon 835
Abdications 69
Abominable things..... 775
Abomination 835
Acceptance 169
Action.....625, 835, 870
Activity of evil..... 557
Adaptation.....29, 62, 64
Admission, price of..... 857
Adultery 778
Advance 566
Adversity...97, 598, 599, 633, 759, 851, 860, 862
Advice.....53, 903
Affection.....430, 770, 851
Afflicted 690
Affliction..156, 157, 273, 279, 281, 282, 283, 286, 287, 288, 299, 304, 308, 309, 313, 316, 318, 320, 321, 323, 324, 339, 385, 413, 444, 520, 599, 601, 686, 712, 761, 817 as a furnace..... 306 benefits of..... 288
Age.....35, 57, 290, 847
and youth.....66, 345 Agriculture 36 a foolish..... 282
Agriculturist 814
Agur, prayer of..... 932
Ahaz.....124, 126
Alcoholic drink..... 867
Allegiance 38
Almighty, arrows of..... 291
Alternatives 837
Amasai's sincerity..... 34
Amaziah 120
Ambition.....103, 105, 120, 121, 350, 902
Ancestry...103, 166, 178, 206, 207, 208, 209
Angels.....270, 506, 572
Anger....244, 341, 831, 838, 844, 847, 851, 862, 863
Anguish 485
Animals, duty to..... 814
Animal soul..... 847
Answer 833
Answering back..... 885 before hearing..... 856
God's call..... 495
Ant 773

PAGE

Antagonism of good and evil..... 929
Antelope 770
Anthropomorphism 88
Antiphon, the..... 726
Anxiety.....307, 544
Appeal to God.....337, 338
Appetites.....231, 239, 247
Apples of gold..... 902
Application.....124, 839
Arbiter, supreme..... 929 Arithmetic, a terrible..... 665 spiritual 625
Armor 197
Arms, call to..... 50
Art, poetry of..... 78
Artaxerxes, decree of..... 167
Aspirations 128
Associations.....153, 158
Atheism.....219, 632
Atheist 472
Atonement.....129, 130, 175
Attention.....537, 767
Attraction 239
Authority.....58, 228, 231
Avarice.....350, 809
Avenger 890
Awakening 476
Baal-perizim 38
Backbiter 905
Backsliding.....827, 828, 906
Bad company.....814, 827 man, a..... 774 things, three..... 855
Balsam 91
Bargain.....55, 871
Battlecries 17
Beautiful things..... 115
Beauty.....238, 241, 939
Bed-closet 114
Begging 547
Beginning.....78, 300, 901
Being 557
Believer 490
Bell of Moscow..... 107
Beloved of God..... 231
Beneficence 529
Benefits, past..... 647
Benevolence.....510, 514, 807, 841, 861
of God..... 790

PAGE

Best and worst 27 make the 307
Better man, the 860 times 520
Bible..139, 140, 214, 217, 291, 346, 483, 581, 682, 687, 689, 690, 691, 692, 693, 694, 695, 696, 697, 698, 745, 777, 779, 872, 931 antiquity of 16 authenticity of 779 knowledge of 892, 927, 931 love for the 779 our guide 753 memory of the 684, 886
reading the 681 religion of the 141 spirit of 696
Birds 431, 612, 644
Birth 206, 208
Blaming wrong party 861
Blessed 455, 612, 623
Blessedness 668, 681
Bless God 464
Blessing others 791
Blessings 410, 526, 574, 804, 819, 846
Blessings, temporal 937
Boasting 916
Body 546
Books of God 688
Boss 333
Both hands 33
Bottle 688
Boundaries, law of 888
Bountiful 787
Bow 24
Bow at a venture 108
Brand of God 775
Brave 32
man 33
Bread of heaven 822, 825
Breasts 355
Breath 305
Bribe 850
Brother and friend 860, 914
Brothers 709
Brutish 811
Bulwarks 536
Burdens 195, 551, 584
Burial song 674
Busybody 868
Calamity 271, 274, 277
Call to work 82
Calumny 203
Calvin, activity of 27
Camillus 126
Captivity, blessings of 151 purpose of 25 return from 704
Care 252, 350, 574
God's 727
Caution 115
Cave-dwellings 383
Cedars of Lebanon 650
Census 52

PAGE

Champions, God's 658
Chance 62
Change 176, 551
moral 364
Character..301, 388, 777, 791, 824, 840, 863, 872, 881 judged by natural religion.. 290 types of 805
Chariots and horses 484
Charity....41, 381, 385, 456, 864, 876, 883
Charms 776
Chastening 757, 760
Chastisement 598, 865
Chastity 781
Cheating 705
Cheerfulness 853
Cheer up 526
Cherubim 67
Chief things first 898
Child and parent 792 Children..56, 670, 705, 706, 747, 824, 835, 836, 838, 871, 882 unnatural 933
Chorister, heavenly 559
Christ..388, 415, 456, 457, 496, 531, 532, 584, 831 doctrine of 530 government of 456, 457, 582 kingdom of 666
knowledge of 373
reconciliation to 457 rooted in 810 delight in man 786, 787 sorrows of 575 union with 895
the true center 667 victory of 622
Christianity 637, 770 evidence of 163 influence of 124
power of 727
Christians 163, 395, 800, 846 boast of 494 mutilated 930
Chronicles 146
Church..153, 154, 155, 156, 158, 162, 532, 702 a palace 702 and religion 165
how to destroy a 155
Churning 935
Cities 37 history of 21
Civilization 244
Clamorous 792
Clean from unclean 324
Cleansing 543, 681
Clouds 787, 931
light in 419, 526
Coals, hot 778
Collection, systematic 132
Comfort 287, 336, 489, 853 in trouble 287, 618
love of 79

PAGE

Comforters, miserable 335
true 335
Commandments 684, 888
Companionship 915, 928, 929 intellectual 17 Company 158
bad 162
the best 823
Compass 921
Compassion 125
Complaining 292, 662
Concealments, divine 901
Conceit 756, 757, 819, 850, 909
Conceits, dangerous 855
Confession and forgiveness 502
Confidence 630
in God 760, 830
Conflict 527
Conquest 479, 537, 766
Conscience 47, 139, 140, 175, 267, 336, 343, 523, 679, 803, 842, 861, 873, 878, 917
Consecration 36
Consolation 268, 335, 508, 565
Constructive and destructive 589
Contempt 685
Content 13, 246, 318, 355, 514, 665
Contention 869, 914
Contentment 837, 862, 913
Controversy 564
Conversation 330, 840, 858 upright 514
Converted 157
Copper 80
Cornerstone 679, 725
Corruptions 918
Council chamber 838
David's first 36
Counsel 755, 839, 969 and confederation 51
Counsellors, the seven 238
Courage 31, 247, 248
Covenant 218, 619
Covetousness 198, 473, 876
Cowardice, moral 917
Creation 504, 650
belongs to God 439
Creator 717, 786
Credulity 828
Cries, two 459
Crime 511
Crisis 551
Crocodile 439, 440
Crooked ways 795, 802
Cross 286, 291, 310, 346
Crown of joy 722
Crowns 117, 874
Cuneatic inscription 164
Cunning 201
Cupbearer 186
Cupidity 915
Curiosity 765
Cursing 665, 907
Cyrus 145, 151, 159, 285

PAGE

Daric 68
Darius 159
Darkness 366, 650
and light alike to God 717
Dark sayings 746
David and Israel 53
David's method 722 religion 45 spirit 65
Day, living by the 757
Days, full of 57
Death 98, 113, 248, 290, 297, 325, 326, 327, 329, 337, 338, 341, 342, 352, 371, 386, 499, 500, 501, 510, 514, 517, 518, 622, 625, 726, 754, 781, 804, 832
Death-bed, Christian 46
pardon 115
Death, Job's desire for 292 moral 772
of Severus 253 preparation for 802
Valley of 489
Debt 888
Deceit 843, 891
Declension, spiritual 378
Deeds 348
and words 817
Defense, unjust 321
Delight in God 360
Deliverance 475, 477, 478
Deliver thyself 772
Depravity 92, 895
Designs, good 84
Desire 113, 611 unsatisfied 879 vain 548
Despair 276, 278
Despondency 593
Destruction 815
Devices 865
Devil 349, 521, 658
Devil's sonata 398
Devotedness, call to 67
Devotion 47
Devoutness and uprightness 493
Dial 143
Difficulties removed 371
Dignity 891
Diligence 818, 888, 891, 900
spiritual 934
Diogenes 759
Discipline 36, 363, 686, 811
Discontent 913
Discord 195
Discretion 248, 819
Discussion 858
Disgrace 854
Dishonesty 402
Disobedience, judgment for 750
Disputes 858, 896
Distaff 937
Distress 292
Diversity 152

PAGE
Dog, a faithful..... 935
Doing and teaching.....52, 199
Double-dealing 918
Double tongue..... 388
Doubt 586
Downward but difficult..... 822
Doxology and benediction..... 710
Dream 348
Dress 780
Drinking 868
Drunkard 893
Drunkenness 893
Dukes 10
Dust 321
Duties.....34, 37, 667, 673
Duty..108, 120, 238, 247, 248, 345, 521, 663, 779, 885 brings trials..... 215 division of..... 196
Dwelling place..... 628
Eagles on Mt. Taurus..... 850
Ear and eye..... 871 evil 926
Early impressions 932 piety 784
to bed..... 937
Earnestness.....188, 196, 254
Earth for man..... 673
Earthly things..... 473
Earthquakes 477
Eating.....237, 889
Economy.....144, 877, 916, 923
Education.....854, 882
Egotism 869
Eliphaz 283
Emotion 836
Employment 781
Encouragements in trial..... 541
End better than beginning..... 444
Endeavor 794
Enemies 706
Enemy 346
Enjoyment 36
Enmity 876
Enthusiasm 431
Envy.....656, 831, 894, 911, 912
Epaminondas 404
Ephraimites 22
Equality 881
Equity, feigned..... 244
Escape 271
Esther.....240, 241
Eternity 730
Evil 359, 843
company.....749, 827 deliverance from.....842 desire to..... 875 forsaking 790 immunity from.....817, 823 one 771 overcoming.....703, 782, 895 phases of..... 851 surroundings 911
Exalted 620
PAGE
Example.....200, 209, 218, 220, 754, 823 cost of good..... 199
Excuses 895
Executor, royal..... 81
Expectation 532
Experience....312, 375, 394, 506, 598, 782
Expostulation, divine..... 607
Expression 395
Eyes.....768, 777, 779
Ezra 166 humiliation of, for sins of people.. 173 preaching of..... 211
Faith..111, 155, 171, 172, 189, 243, 272, 275, 293, 299, 326, 362, 471, 477, 487, 493, 501, 505, 506, 513, 528, 531, 553, 558, 580, 591, 634, 669, 678, 694, 804, 849, 881
and sense..... 538
and works 470
Faithfulness....293, 770, 805, 862, 870, 920
Faith in Christ..... 930
Faithlessness 247
Faith, means of prosperity..... 111 trial of..... 413
Falcon, flight of..... 431
Fallen, the..... 292
Fallibility 21
Falsehood..161, 402, 456, 819, 849, 861, 862, 875 and truth..... 879
False reports 202
Fame 13
Family life..... 810 scenes 848
Famine.....600, 601
Farmer 46
Fate 253
Fathers and children..... 66
Father's warning, a..... 747 wish, a..... 914
Faultfinding 297
Faults.....818, 834 telling over..... 719 Favor 833, 863 life in God's..... 498
Fear..219, 245, 332, 333, 492, 498, 600, 619, 760 and faith..... 362
God and the king..... 897
Fearing Christ..... 788
Fearlessness, fixedness and faith..... 669
Fear of man..... 929 of the Lord.....746, 841, 881, 935
Feast, Eastern..... 866
Feeble 654
Fellowship 161
Fickleness 631
Fields laughing..... 567
Finding for seeking..... 784
Filial love..... 747 recollections 763
Fillets.....755, 776
Fireside 45
Firmness.....201, 203

PAGE
First man 330
Fitness 76, 569, 907
Fixedness 211
Flattery .. 470, 539, 890, 911, 912, 914, 924
Flight, safety in 723
Folly 660, 838, 866, 907, 922
Foolish 827
Foolishness 517
Fools .. 823, 827, 828, 830, 833, 855, 908, 912
Fool's vineyard 899
Fool, way of 816
Forbearance 217, 904
Foresight 773
Forgeries 27
Forgetting 657
Forgive 492, 615
Forgiveness 896
Fortitude 207
Fortune 211, 380, 469
men of 19
Foundation, sure 789
Fountains 906
Foxes 193
Freedom 828
Fretfulness 831
Fretful, sermon for 514
Fretting 861, 897
Fretting against God 285
Friend, a faithful 860, 930
Friendless 295
Friends .. 16, 38, 65, 288, 294, 339, 509, 771, 772, 773, 823, 852, 862, 863
family 913
Friendship . 175, 276, 285, 294, 295, 852, 904, 905, 913, 914, 915, 929 hollow 295, 523
renewal of 915
true 295, 524
Friends, injuries by 293, 338
Frivolity 836
Frogs 599
Frost 423
Froward 783, 916
Fruitfulness 815
Fruits 639
Fun 910
Future 489, 911 provision for 56 resigned to God 407
Gain in loss 758
Gains, illgotten 883, 888, 918 true and false 834
Galen and anatomy 681 Garden 900 of king 191
Garments 210 elegant 938
Gateways 852
Gazelle 770
Genealogies 9, 11
lessons from 9
Generosity 68
Generous man 922
Genius 897

PAGE
Gentiles 569
Gentleman, true 282
Getting 920
Giants 24
Gifts 68, 91, 857 gradual 766
Gimlet, Satan's 363
Girding 479
Girdle 479
Give 83, 358
Giving 510, 515, 523, 590, 761, 772, 864, 876, 877, 884 and increasing 260 cheerfully 757 freewill 117, 363 proportionate 210 up all 892
Gladness and goodness 924
Glass 376
Glorifying God 719
Glory, declare His 636 of Christ's kingdom 727
Gluttony 201
God .. 102, 108, 121, 145, 168, 169, 170, 175, 215, 216, 217, 281, 284, 288, 289, 302, 304, 311, 318, 351, 355, 356, 357, 359, 360, 363, 364, 368, 370, 414, 420, 433, 434, 442, 461, 465, 468, 475, 482, 491, 503, 504, 507, 513, 515, 520, 522, 527, 534, 590, 600, 605, 606, 616, 622, 632, 637, 640, 645, 646, 649, 653, 654, 672, 673, 677, 691, 696, 713, 716, 724, 731, 770, 780, 807, 808, 813, 844, 856, 871, 894
God, acquaintance with 360 a guide 501, 567
allhearing 871
and His people .. 84, 87, 100, 367, 402, 505, 506, 515, 546 and man 874
and the king 75 anger of 602, 604 banners of 559 care of 427, 512, 589
character of 574
claims of to homage 44 compassion of 607, 647
condescension of 646, 670 dealing with sin 11, 420 deep things of 537 dependence on 500, 567 despising 822 displeasure of 621 doings of 568 dwelling with men .. 84, 442, 473, 569 enmity to 610
exalted 486
fatherhood of 511, 831, 874 fatherly claims of 892 fear of 200, 457, 492 following 306, 340, 361, 563 forbearance of 313 forgetting 301

PAGE

God, for, who against 917 gentleness of 479 gifts of 571, 588 glory of 87, 271, 464, 672 going before 485, 571 good and evil from 275 good creditor 47, 516 goodness of...216, 501, 507, 585, 712 guidance of 845 hardened against 302 hiding himself 547 honored by 475 hope in 519 is all 259
Job's idea of 302, 303 judgments of 591, 597
kingdom of 600, 638 knowledge and service of 66 of 442, 633
man 716
love of..284, 405, 496, 499, 527, 624, 655 mercies of 659, 672, 686, 717 names of 57 nearness of 696 to 732
need of 752
omnipresence of 102, 716, 924 of salvation 617 our heritage 473 owner of all 69 plans of 257 pleasing 843 pleasure of in His people 733
power of 562, 635
promise of 437
protection of..43, 479, 488, 501, 504, 568, 609 providence of 713
purpose of 247
relation of to people....47, 553, 577, 590, 602, 608, 655 reproving 432 resistless pleasure of 710 rest in 513 revelation of 521
seeing 347, 771, 775, 834 seeks man 789 service of 800 shunning 328
sighing for 361, 459, 527 speaking to 320 submission to 520 the judge 711, 876
thoughts of 629, 630, 718 trust in...52, 257, 267, 281, 459, 469, 470, 472
unchangeable 495 unjust charges against 386 walking with 100, 378 will of 875 wisdom of 442
with 46, 588, 666 word of 213, 219, 255, 363, 455

PAGE

Godliness 766, 832
Godly 784, 802
and wicked 315, 587, 874
Goel 890
Gold 844
and beauty 808
Golden Rule 874
Good 757, 809, 811, 815
and evil 809, 811
deeds 207, 222 deserving 809 for evil 666, 851, 905, 935 man, course of 363 men and God 752
nature 914
Goodness...372, 380, 703, 756, 805, 813, 824 and blessedness 803 intelligent 894
Good, the chief 763
Gospel 532, 622, 783, 887
Gossip 805
Government....77, 80, 82, 92, 93, 237, 833, 901, 917
Grace 407, 543, 562, 566, 832, 841 day of 794 in unlikely places 96
of God 857
Graces 277, 516
Grace, saying 660 unlimited 168
Graciousness of God 727
Gratitude..259, 460, 461, 611, 613, 659, 663, 672, 673, 880
Grave 280
Greatest things 578
Greatness....27, 91, 178, 242, 298, 474, 581
Greed 890
Grief 173, 818 for others 697
Grinding 389
Groans 645
Growth 190, 300, 368, 725
Grumbling 407
Guard, a double 760
Guidance 868
divine 499, 756
of Christ 786
Guide 255
Guilt and repentance 112
Habit 123, 323, 324, 759, 771, 882
Hailstorm 423
Hallelujah victory 111
Haman, disgrace of 252
Hand, Divine 514, 699
Hands, two 938
Hanun, homiletical hints from 49
Happiness...33, 35, 259, 267, 289, 324, 329, 379, 392, 399, 407, 412, 490, 512, 539, 686, 837, 848, 898 domestic 289
Hardening 879
Harvest 570
Hard words 818

PAGE
Hasty speech 675
Hater, causeless 510
Hatred 796, 858
Health 399 philosophy of 755, 756
Hear Christ 321
Hearing both sides 805
Heart .. 119, 317, 372, 543, 544, 560, 654, 657, 753, 768, 802, 810, 836, 837, 911 a sound 687, 831 consecrated 562
government of 669
keeping the 767, 768, 819, 915 merry 852 perfect 119
Hearts, high 15 of men alike 915 Heart, the fixed 555 wanderings 331
Heathen 77
learning from 620
Heaven 301, 311, 313, 318, 319, 426, 638, 920 begun below 684
Heavens 481, 629, 637
Hedge 269
Heir 824
Hell 769, 788
Help, cry for 488
Helper 475, 580
Helping 436 others 862, 895, 924
Heredity 206
Heritage 691
Heroes 863
Heroic, the 664
Hezekiah 129
Hidden ones 609
Hide, impossible to 253
Hiding face 323 place 691
High 920
High priests, two 18
Hindrances 161, 505
Hippopotamus 437
Historian 260
History 595
Hold fast 764
Holiness ... 124, 125, 142, 244, 260, 586, 870 and good nature 939 and happiness 758 longings for 799
Holy, knowledge of the 791
Home 289, 624, 709, 763, 810 a religious 763 influences 114 secret of happy 859
the new 65
Honesty .. 45, 54, 172, 388, 844, 872, 888, 928
Honey 895, 896
Honor 17, 242, 255, 906
Honorable mention 61
Honors 274
Hookes, death of 51

PAGE
Hope .. 275, 287, 301, 328, 330, 342, 344, 487, 522, 800, 804, 832, 920 deceitful 316
in God 707
Hopes 331, 344
Horn 591
Horse 431, 880
Hospital 518
Hospitality in the East 390, 392
Housekeeping, Divine 713
Houseroof 875
Housewifery 825
Humanity 610, 832
Human nature, dignity of 465
Humiliation 50, 578
Humility ... 69, 290, 314, 339, 362, 385, 433, 455, 589, 671, 716, 762, 794, 841, 842, 845, 878, 881, 882, 928, 930
Hunger 847
Hungry 357
Hurry 874
Husband's troubles 863
Hypocrisy 804
Hypocrites 106, 301, 334, 880 loss of 371
Ice 425
Ideal 922
Idle 80, 190
Idleness 81, 191, 192, 193, 774, 775, 799, 814, 830, 847, 866, 900, 909
Idolatry 98, 391, 637
Idols 673, 711
Ignorance 377, 811, 816, 860, 783
Ill-temper 813
Immorality, causes of public 927
Immorality 279, 325, 326, 327, 804
Impenitence 412
Imperfections 276
Impertinence 856
Imprecations 194, 556
Imprecatory Psalms 664
Impudence 928
Incense 555
Incorrigible 823
Independence 830, 883, 889, 932 of thought 317
Indifference 751
Individuality 67
Indolence 78, 195, 799, 822, 826, 898
Indulgence of flesh 717, 904
Indulgent 377
Industry 190, 785, 814, 916, 937
Infirmities 610
Influence 47, 199, 805, 923
Ingratitude 636, 922, 932
Inheritance, choice of our 530
Injuries 32, 911, 925, 936
Innocence 485
Inquiry 926
Insincerity 201
Inspection 544
Instincts 934
Instruction 933
Insult, forgiving 483

PAGE

Integrity 802
conscious 310
Intellect 139
Intention, a good 919
Intolerable things 934
Irrigation 874
Israel's commissariat-general 29
Israel, religion of 606
Issachar 21
Jabez 15
Jealousy 243, 778
Jehoiada, lessons from 115
Jerusalem 701
joy of 227 ruins of 188 wall of 204
Jesus 621, 722
Jewels 617
Joash 117
Job 306, 361, 379, 393 anxiety of, for children 267 bitter exclamation of 309 challenge of, to friends 296
character of 269, 380, 381, 387, 433 daughter of 444 impatience of 276
lessons from 271, 281, 328, 382
my servant 269
prayer of 443
remonstrance of 295 estimate of friends' reproof 295
Jotham, power of 124
Journey 633
Joy 88, 165, 212, 229, 246, 256, 296, 418, 489, 491, 533, 534, 535, 565, 580, 603, 634, 639, 733 and gloom 821 and sadness 159 in worship 701 of a good wife 938
Joys 256
Joy, saintly 733
Judge, God the 711, 771
Judgment 253, 318, 392, 394, 364, 467, 792, 796, 810, 836, 878
Jealousy, uncharitable 269
Juniper 699
Just 61, 109
Justice 90, 109, 403, 405, 620, 843, 844, 853, 870, 895, 898, 936
Just man 876 memory of the 794
Kant 481
Keeper, our 700
Kept 629
Kindness 49, 116, 511, 795, 796, 815, 938 kingly 92
King 11, 49, 77, 103, 469, 582, 583, 631 a weak 238
Kingdom 63
King, Jehovah the 631 of kings 530, 586 sermon on accession of 164
the first 923

PAGE

Kiss 457
Knowledge 34, 66, 160, 213, 320, 321, 375, 376, 377, 411, 466, 755, 784, 786, 787, 790, 815, 839, 846, 867, 873, 886, 892, 894, 908 concerning 817
Divine 860
root of 746 saving 822 speculative 753
Korah, children of 18
Labor 58, 104, 192, 224, 516, 797, 813, 826, 829, 830, 874, 886, 892 and rest 705
true 797
Lamp 690, 709, 776
Landmarks 891
Language 288 of Scripture 300
Lap 848
Laugh 828
Laughter 837
Law 822
and gospel 411, 493
Divine 456, 482
manner in which heard 212
Laws 48
of God 685, 689
Laziness 192, 773, 774, 885
Leading, God's ways of 713
Learning 375, 749
Lebanon, Cedars of 605
Lessons 109
Letters 202
Liars 798, 865
Liberality 809, 869
Libertine 769
Liberty 257, 617, 632, 764, 883
Licentiousness 935
Lie 202, 321, 545, 687, 699, 910
the everlasting 334
Life 9, 10, 11, 12, 70, 84, 142, 190, 251, 296, 297, 298, 300, 309, 315, 334, 347, 348, 353, 354, 368, 374, 420, 445, 476, 507, 519, 625, 642, 683, 718, 731, 797, 798, 800, 801, 810, 818 a long 755, 934, 935 brevity of 307
changing current of 70 end of 296
future 326 inferior 318 like a song 719
money payment for 537 on the heights 852 purpose of 310, 360
seeing 770
troubled 476 value of 273
without God 717
Light 285, 286, 341, 415, 417, 419, 422, 423, 424, 648, 766
Lightening 414

PAGE
Lights 821
Likeness to Christ..... 751
Lincoln 514
Lips, keeping the door of..... 720
Lives.....199, 354
Loiterers 793
Longing, indolent..... 879
Loom and its lessons..... 297
Lord, eyes of the..... 102 of hosts..... 29
Love..36, 45, 47, 240, 312, 314, 370, 487, 536, 545, 581, 796, 806, 848, 912, 924, 936 false 903
Loving 409
Lovingkindness 493
listening for..... 723
Love to God.....697, 756, 785, 788
and man..... 41
Loyalty 897
Lunacy 701
Lust 777
Luther, strength of..... 410
Luxury 889
Lying 865
Malice.....159, 161
Man....24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 32, 34, 55, 298, 435, 465, 724, 814 and animal..... 438 appealing to God..... 459
character of..... 408
Manchester exchange, motto on..... 880
Man compared to a tree..... 455 inferior to angels..... 284 in God's image..... 724
insignificance of..... 420
Jewish and Christian thought of.. 916
Manna.....216, 597
Man, perfect..... 29
place of.....269, 284
Man's cry 467 greatness and littleness..... 694 relation to God..... 687
Marriage.....90, 95, 531, 778 politic 89
Marvelous things..... 640
Master and servant..... 927
Matrimonial misery..... 877
Maxims 900
Meadows, lessons of..... 624
Meddler 910
Mediocrity.....345, 813
Meditation.....564, 594, 682
Medusa 241
Meek 296
Meekness.....732, 821
Melancholy 496
Melchizedek, order of..... 667 type of Christ..... 667
Memories 795
Memory.....9, 42
PAGE Men 46 famous 18 great 14 separated 34
three classes of..... 30 two methods of treating..... 92
Mercies 581
of God.....659, 672, 686
of wicked..... 814
two priceless..... 706
Mercy...49, 50, 216, 226, 281, 305, 319, 380, 404, 465, 491, 546, 555, 605, 646, 751, 851 and justice..... 727 immensity of..... 662 man and..... 647
Merit, real..... 254
Merriment.....836, 852
Method 60
Methods, imperfect..... 37
Mightiest 30
Mighty men, David's..... 30
Mind.....23, 654, 827 eternal 18 failure of..... 20 natural 562
no horizon..... 22 powers of..... 18
Minds.....13, 23 great 20 narrow 22
Miners.....373, 374
Minister, cabinet..... 57
Ministry 110
Christian.....166, 613
faithful 106
Minorities and majorities..... 458
Minutes 307
Miserere 543
Miserimus 878
Missionary Christian..... 371
Moderation 904
Modesty 817
Moloch, worship of..... 124
Moments 372
Money 861
Money-lender 806
Morality.....825, 833
Moralizing 829
Moral qualities..... 879 varieties 14
Mordecai 243
More, Sir Thomas..... 26
Morrow 911
Mortar 916
Moth 372
Mothers.....129, 509, 776, 933
Mother's counsel..... 935
Motive.....778, 881
noble 50
Mountains.....512, 573
Mourner's song..... 272
Mourning.....143, 669
Mouth of wicked..... 805

PAGE
Murderer 920
Music.....19, 40, 41, 42, 82, 226, 227, 617
church 82
Mystery.....422, 424, 595
Names 10, 153 record of 153
Nation, guarantee of progress..... 94
Nature..88, 193, 207, 396, 416, 418, 431, 436, 438, 440, 441, 649, 650, 651, 652, 662, 732, 900
God in 303, 439
Navigation, spiritual 661
Nazarite 770
Nebuchadnezzar 143
Necessity 778
Negligence 678, 925
Nehemiah 188, 189, 200, 201, 212
Nelson 306
Neutrality of mind 22
New life 673
News, good 906
Newspapers 906
Nitre 905
Nobleman, true..... 517
Noise 884
Nose-rings 808
Nothing 826
Oath 391
Obedience.....238, 323, 398, 406, 540, 544 to the will of God.....723, 777
Obstacles, removal of..... 671
Obstinacy.....50, 607, 821, 916
Obtrusiveness 902
Occupation 63, 64, 168
Offense, taking..... 61
Office, high 62
Officer, requisites of..... 62
Old 595
age 68, 290, 383, 581, 645 growing 891
Omnipotence 830
Omniscience 834 ignored 564
Oen mouth 607
Ophir 90
Opinion, good..... 382 Opposition 850
overthrown 536
Oppression 198, 851
Oppressor 761, 917
Order 57, 58, 76
and confusion 311
Ought 373
Overthrown 813
Palace of Solomon 89
Palm tree 630
Pardon 647
Parental correction 824
Parents 891
Park-keepers 16
Parricides 932
Partiality 842, 921
Parties 50
Passion 912
PAGE Passions 816
Passover 142
Past 627
and future 383
use of 312, 339
Patience..305, 312, 314, 316, 317, 352, 559, 593, 601, 602, 603, 904
Patriot 925
Patriotism 94, 98, 196
Peace..249, 406, 517, 534, 580, 758, 760, 761, 843, 868 offerings 781 perfect 698
through suffering 406
Peacock 429
Penitence 402, 462
Penitent, prayer of the..... 492
People, innumerable 64
Perez-uzza 37
Perfection 870
Perils 754
Persecution 687
Perseverance 495
Persian against gospel law..... 239
Perversity, human 657
Philanthropy 86
true 884
Philosophy 208
Phoenix 381, 382
Phylactery 779
Piety 47
prosperity of 122
true 839
Pilgrimage 685
Pitt 897
Pity 710, 729
Plague 53
Pleasure 633, 758 earthly 259, 352
Plans, making 642
Pleiades 425, 426
Ploughing 869
Poetry of the Bible..... 691
Poison 607
Politeness 163
Politics, corrupt 922
Polygamy 531
Poor..358, 387, 523, 881, 887, 919, 926, 931
cry of 876
Genealogy of 208
Porter 61
Porters and doorkeepers 26
Possession 675 of good 919
Poverty 198, 387, 814, 820
Power.....106, 620, 761, 863
Praise..27, 43, 44, 45, 59, 60, 269, 323, 425, 504, 506, 535, 541, 542, 550, 565, 567, 578, 581, 629, 912, 924 daily 59 duty of 641
Praises 619

PAGE
Praise to God..659, 660, 662, 667, 668, 670, 677, 697, 698, 699, 710, 725, 726, 730, 731, 733
Pray and stay..... 27
Prayer..59, 75, 83, 86, 96, 110, 111, 185, 186, 188, 189, 249, 252, 277, 286, 315, 330, 336, 345, 353, 386, 462, 463, 466, 478, 480, 486, 488, 491, 495, 503, 508, 512, 548, 549, 551, 552, 554, 557, 558, 559, 560, 561, 564, 569, 570, 573, 574, 575, 576, 578, 579, 580, 582, 583, 584, 587, 588, 590, 594, 596, 600, 605, 607, 610, 664, 665, 678, 695, 720, 727, 760, 800, 835, 840, 841, 882 answer to 55, 232, 685 before choosing 187 evil of neglected 96 family 596
for country 254 for help 590
in emergencies 99
Jehoshaphat's 110 of Esther 252 of Gotthold 571 oriental posture in..... 84 purity in 336 cold 720
two 17
the Lord's..... 583 unanswered 597, 606
Praying and living..... 835
Preacher 411
Preaching 351
Preparation 56, 861
Presents 443
Preservation 628
Presumption 828
Pretension 903
Pride..228, 249, 250, 251, 259, 432, 434, 435, 441, 467, 468, 775, 802, 821, 842, 843, 857, 902
Princes 821
many 917, 918
Principle, fidelity to.. 760
Principles 754
divine 767
Prison dreams 722
Prisoner 603
Problem, historical 88
Prodigal 855, 866
Profession 676
Profligacy 780, 877
Promise 248
kept 199
Promises of God.....708, 758, 866
Promotion 762
Prosperity..57, 75, 76, 90, 91, 92, 94, 97, 120, 271, 285, 606, 751
Protection 720
Protestants, duty of..... 94
Proud 683

PAGE
Proverbs 745, 746, 901
introduction to 741 synopsis of 743
Providence..145, 168, 372, 375, 505, 512, 595
of God 713, 730
Provision, comprehensiveness of divine. 727
God's 654
Prudence 881
Prudent 280
Psalm 3 458
9 466
68 .....570, 571
76 592
79 602
100 642
Psalms 478, 494, 495
Psalter 458, 462, 480, 488
Pulpit 351
Punishment 53
Purity 44, 154, 806
Purpose 340
Purposes, broken 339
Pursuits, the best 680
Quarrels 877, 902
Quarrelsome people 855, 902
Queen, valorous 247
Question, a bitter 280
Quietness before God 761
Race, human 119
Rain and dew 424
Rank 198
Raven 269
Rebellious 561 people 657
Rebuke of righteous 721, 921
Receptive 32
Recluse 854
Rectitude 793
Redemption 493, 787
Redemptive power in life..... 399
Reflection 682
Reform 330
Reformers 229
Refuge 560, 660 cities of 20 system 21
Regenerate 875
Rejoice 44
Relations 31
Relationship, divine 688
Religion..140, 142, 371, 382, 398, 503, 536, 756, 764, 818, 870, 879, 887, 923, 933 and morality 825 and the nation 104 a sad 57 comforts of 248 material advantages of 732 no 384 result of 117
the highest wisdom..... 668
true....47, 54, 100, 105, 189, 347, 472, 488
Religious pleasure 14

PAGE
Remain, things that 82
Remedy, no 144
Remembrance 590, 593 subjects of 42
Renewed 37
Repentance..14, 174, 176, 177, 400, 401, 521, 524, 528, 529
Reproof..... 749, 750, 790, 811, 902 questionable 313
Reputation 296
Resentment 926, 928
Resignation 305
Resolution 598
Respect 379
Rest..... 58, 220, 280, 296, 334, 358
the soul's 674, 725, 825
true 274
Result 455
Results, considering 663
Resurrection 539, 622
Retaliation 899
Reticence 833
Retribution 826, 877
future 468
Return to God 675
Revelation..... 397, 470, 642, 927
Revenge 121, 872, 897, 905
Reverence to parents 891
Revival 613, 644
of work 162
Rewards 668
Rich and poor 516, 919
Riches..674, 712, 797, 803, 810, 830, 839, 840, 874, 886, 889, 890 or reputation 880
trusting in 810
true..... 799, 820, 861, 886, 920
Rich, laboring to be..... 889
Ridicule 131
Right 110, 747, 880 doing 66
Righteous 461, 515, 556, 838 man,the 669, 799
Righteousness 455, 561, 614
Christ's 109 life in 818
Righteous, prosperity of 630 Right hand 758 hand, pledge of..... 725 Rights 404
of man 667
Right, the 720 way, the 660
Rock 562
Rod..... 801, 824, 865, 885, 907
Royalty 239
Ruby 374
Rulers 608, 926
Ruler, wicked 920
Sabbath 97, 230
Sacrifice 222,541, 545
great 81
Safety-lamp 481
Safety with God..... 764

PAGE
Saints 78, 614
Salvation..435, 457, 458, 521, 542, 572, 655
Sanctification 688
Sanctuary 461
Sarcasm 340, 351
Satan..... 51, 113, 268, 270, 273, 350
Satisfaction 475, 626, 848
Satisfied 709, 823
Saviour 733
Savonarola, prayer of..... 604
Scandal 910, 926
Science 759
Scoffers 826
Scorn 197, 385
Scorner 836, 867, 875
Scornful 925
Scorning 750, 761, 826
Scribes 13
Sea 661, 662, 732
Sea-eagle 793
Secrecy 771
Secret place 626
Secrets 871, 872
Security 250, 288, 560
Selah 594
Self 535, 546, 547
Self-command 252
conceit 857 condemnation 529 confidence 921
control 856, 863, 907 deceiver exposed 932 hurt 270 indulgence 877
Selfishness 341, 541, 544, 792
Self-justification 932 knowledge 376, 635, 880
love 847, 862 mastery 79, 547 praise 902, 912 reproach 370 reverence 239
righteousness 110, 506, 539
will 538, 854, 882
Senators, wisdom taught..... 653
Sensual pleasure 909
Sentiments 220
Sentinels 774
Serpents 781 Servants 928
of God 23, 186
of man 268
Service 12, 204, 240 joyful 642, 646
of Christ 894
Shame 546, 782
Sheepfold 46
Sheol 768, 835
Shepherd 489
Shining 164, 669
Shishak, inscription in temple of Karnak 95

PAGE

Sick 645 visiting the 399
Signal, appointed 197
Sight, true 131
Silence.....518, 519, 853, 854
Silk 77, 86
Simple 674, 789
Sin..54, 84, 86, 126, 144, 145, 174, 367, 389, 470, 483, 511, 516, 517, 522, 624, 669, 689, 692, 695, 747, 754, 765, 766, 780, 820, 830, 893, 909, 921, 927 absurdity of 894 binds sinner 771
Sincerity.....143, 167, 370, 395, 615
Sin, confession of..52, 176, 214, 483, 523, 919, 920 conviction of 53, 614 covered 919
deceitfulness of 807
Singers and their song..... 714 portion 223
Singing 40, 82, 142
Sin, Hardship of.....822, 824 hiding 575
Sinking but trusting 520
Sin, living for 765
Sinner.....300, 354, 389, 611, 748, 751, 922
Sinners admonished 750
Sinner saved 793
Sinner's retrospect 770
Sin-offering 128
Sin, penalty for..... 806 pleasures of..... 792 reproved 598
Sins, besetting 478 forgiveness of..... 502 habitual 932
Sin, sorrow for..... 175
Sins repeated 922
Sin's sway 693
Sin, the greatest folly 668 way of 754
why not pardoned..... 299
Slander..204, 408, 472, 663, 699, 776, 855, 871, 906, 911
Slanderer 847
Slavery 77, 389, 390
Sleep 760, 909
Slingers 122
Slippery places 587
Sloth 794, 823, 837
Slow 328
Sluggard.....773, 794, 799, 885
Small matters 926
Smelting 849
Smitten sins 872
Snail 556
Snare 341, 924
Snow.....417, 423, 424, 425, 730
Sobriety 237
Society, dangers of..... 719
ungodly 496
Socrates and his wife..... 875

PAGE

Sodom and Gomorrah..... 359
Soldier 94
Solitude 682
Song.....41, 129, 208, 223, 496
intentions of 19
new 636, 640
of triumph, Israel's..... 706 Songs, inspired 718 of Zion 685 on the march 685
Song, the believer's 619
Son predicted 56
Sons 24
Sorrow..245, 280, 287, 297, 308, 310, 328, 338, 387, 492, 525, 686, 723 anticipation of 256
Sorrowful Christian 714
Sorrow, human impatience before great. 275
Sorrows, imaginary 12
Sorrow, waves of..... 618
Soul.....313, 327, 432, 623, 628, 629, 634 among lions 554
and sense 853
cry of 490
despising the 841 nature of the..... 658 preservation 493 selling 769 solitude of the..... 827 Souls, the burden of..... 721 winning 810
Sowing 807, 809, 897
Speaking evil 719, 845
Speech..299, 332, 395, 530, 798, 801, 806, 813, 819, 833, 834, 845, 846, 853, 855, 899, 907 of good 795
Spendthrift 918
Spider's web 300
Spices, burning of..... 102
Spirit, Holy 622, 630
tender 140
Spiritual beings 268
life 358
longing 829 merchandise 758
Spirit-weighing 843
Sports 210
Spring 318, 426
Stability 568, 812
Staff 931
Stars 426, 629, 639
Statesman 79
Stewardship 761
Stimulants 936
Storms, God in..... 185
Stranger in the house of God..... 86
Strangers 483
Strategems 815
Strength ..293, 301, 307, 436, 613, 637, 848 and grace 806
Strife 761
Strong's need of weak..... 934
Struggle 519

PAGE

Subjects of king 639
Submission 274
Success 120, 121, 471, 880 constituents of 114 danger of quick 243 only through God 856
way of 110
Suffer 411
Suffering 278, 308, 322, 443, 486, 577, 713, 906, 910 destructive force of 312 maddening force of 277, 278
Suicide 28
Summer 327
Sun 415, 655
Sunday 680, 683, 684
Sun of righteousness 403
Sunshine, the soul's 685
Superficiality 880
Support, Divine 474
Surety 772, 871
Suspicion 917
Sweetness 241
Sycophancy 889
Sympathy 275, 294, 443, 515, 617, 659, 857

Tables 413, 577
Talebearer 856
Tale to tell 568
Talker 797
Tapestry 781
Taste 646, 808
Teacher 797 and learner 745, 914
Teachers 745, 772
the four 923
Teaching 351
Tears 553, 604, 676
Telegraph cable 426
Temper 816
Temperance 868, 893, 904
Temple 66, 76, 79, 153, 671 begun 157
rebuilt 158
Temptation 54, 89, 350, 507, 792, 873, 906 antidote to 753, 760 ministry of 791
Tempting 748
Temptress 776
Terror 343, 627
Thankfulness 201, 221
Thanks 43, 223, 660, 673
Thanksgiving 42, 44, 478, 552, 864
Theology, natural 481
Thirst 525, 527
Thorns 678, 899
Thought 633
Thoughtfulness 811
Thoughts 719, 766, 797, 813, 816 evil 691
swift 661

Thrift 566
Thunder 426
Time 194, 197, 316, 610, 625

PAGE

Times, considering 35 difference in 635
Toiler's prayer 202
Tokens for good 616
Toleration 676
To-morrow 911, 912, 931
Tongue 289, 291, 407, 463, 507, 674, 675, 768, 795, 796, 816, 833, 858, 878 of fool 855
power of 658
Tongues, gift of 820
Torturing 93, 331
Tranquillity 472
Traps, moral 749
Treachery 798
Treason 849
Treasure 56, 752, 753, 789
Tree, a symbol 759
Trees 325
Trial and chastisement 271
Trials 272, 276, 291, 339, 344, 405, 409, 873
Tribulation 386, 412
Tried 92
Trifle 921
Triumph 848
Roman 31
Trouble 286, 288, 407, 549, 615, 665, 804, 896
Troubles 104, 271, 272, 332, 561, 634
Trumpets, blowing 82, 640
Trusts 255, 322, 486, 538, 552, 577, 700, 701, 721, 729 Trusted 255
Trust in princes 677
Truth 142, 366, 367, 371, 395, 402, 494, 675, 684, 687, 694, 817, 828, 830, 861, 865 884, 890, 892, 929

Truths 676
Truth unchanging 816
Try 721
Tunnels 856
Tyndale's motto 849

Unbelief 596, 597
Understanding 822
Unfaithfulness 229
Unfortunate, contempt for 317
Ungodliness 807
Ungodly 919
prosperity of 285
Ungrateful 37
Universe, spiritual significance of 651
Ungenerate 875
Unseen, fellowship with 283 message from 284
Upright 795
Uprightness 54
advantages of 918
Upright, prayer of the 718 security of the 516
Usefulness 444, 669, 700
Usury 193, 918

PAGE
Uzziah, sin of..... 122
Vacillation 920
Vanity 243, 244, 333, 909
Variety 242
Verdicts, mistaken..... 458
Verities, spiritual 886
Vestments 497
Vexations 632
Vice 684 and virtue 230
Victories 725
Victory the gift of God.....110, 525 through obedience 39
Vindication of the upright..... 362
Vindictiveness 899
Vineyards 599
Virtue 475, 595, 785 ancient 23
Virtues, easy 19
Vision, divine 927
Visitant, mysterious 283
Voice of the Lord..... 497
Voice, the shadowy..... 284
Volumes, two 481
Vows 553
Waiting for the Lord..... 506
Wanderers 877, 913
Wandering 699
Want 826
War 28, 33, 39, 49, 97, 127, 574, 700
Warfare 509
Warning 413, 749
Warrior 30
Watch 99
Watch for morning..... 707
Water 357
Ways, God's 370, 623, 801
Way of life..... 689
Ways of men..... 359
Wealth..76, 122, 800, 821, 872, 883, 889, 919 and piety 267 unjust 349
Weighing 290
Weights 843 and measures 801
Wheat 77
White flag 608
Whole-heartedness 715, 845, 892
Wicked ...352, 355, 511, 556, 798, 808, 829, 867, 896 destiny of 467 flourishing 706
God's anger towards.....463, 807
God's attitude towards..... 879 hatred of the righteous..... 896 Wickedness 774, 798, 854
and wisdom 754
Wicked, prosperity of..... 318
way of 766
Wife.....770, 825, 859, 936, 937, 939
quarrelsome 915
Will 522, 592, 767, 782, 848
without deed 83
Wind south 417
PAGE
Winds, stormy 732
Wine.....688, 867, 877, 892, 936
Winged words 798
Wisdom..75, 90, 317, 369, 375, 376, 378, 394, 396, 397, 409, 749, 754, 756, 759, 760, 764, 765, 768, 782, 783, 784, 785, 786, 787, 788, 789, 790, 791, 802, 806, 821, 843, 845, 846, 871, 895 and fear of God..... 377 and folly 762, 818 and innocency 760
and long life..... 758 divine.....782, 784, 786, 896 get 763
of God 759, 842 seeker 752
Wisdom's feast 789
Wisdom, true 827
two counsels of..... 502 value of 785
Wise 798, 878, 926
Wish 205
Wishes and hopes 808
good 484
Witness, heavenly 336
Winesses 826
Woman.....825, 877, 905, 906, 939 a good 241 a virtuous 812
INDEX Galley 11—Hanes
Women 937 strange 871
Wonder 580 theme for 547
Word in season 839
of God..691, 696, 776, 777, 783, 931
Words..295, 336, 341, 343, 347, 351, 795, 797, 829, 879, 903, 914
bad 313, 393
and life 721
of the Lord..... 614
pleasant 846
well-chosen 903
Word, the 572, 681, 779, 822
Work..100, 140, 177, 225, 307, 650, 774, 809, 823, 891 for each 196, 522 for God 204, 399, 707
Works 193, 815
World, divine proprietorship of the.... 491
Worldliness 538
World, love of..... 37
Worldly possessions 350
World, wrong 609
Worldly things, loss of..... 711
Worm 812
Worship..90, 210, 221, 497, 637, 659, 712 heathen 672
joy in 701
morning 662 nature of 641 public 661
true 68, 504

	PAGE
Wounds of a friend	913
Wound, unbearable	857
Wrestling with God	35
Wretched	519
Wrong	777
Xerxes	242
Young	780
training of the	750
Youth	379, 623
Zeal	41, 63, 64, 132, 194, 576, 694
God-dishonoring	321
Zechariah, murder of	118
Zerubbabel	14
return of	118
Zion	540, 616, 645
Zorah	93

INDEX II.

VOL. II.

[Anecdotes and Illustrative Matter.]

PAGE

Abiding 561
Abstinence and promotion..... 893
Abundance 80
Accepting persons..... 395
Accusations, Malicious..... 932
Action 431
Activity 104
Admiring God's works..... 414
Adoration of God 639
Adrian and the Bishop..... 665
Adversity 500
Advice, Practical 51, 52
Aesop and Xanthus..... 719
Afflictions...279, 305, 306, 309, 312, 398, 413, 508, 518, 568, 686, 817 Affliction a normal state.....276 awakening gratitude 312
Benefit of.....310, 485, 412
Divinity taught by..... 399
Faith in 398
Fruit of 277, 281 incentive to zeal..... 308
Purification from 286
Scripture interpreted by..... 412
Agur 930
Ahaz 126
Ally 38
Ambassador, A faithful..... 823
Ambition 852
Amusements, Frivolous..... 352
Ancestors, Inspired by..... 24
Ancestry 178, 849
Angels 268, 628
Bell of the..... 460 disguised 288, 392
Anger 912
appeased 862
Anointing 490, 620
Answer, A noble..... 247
A wise..... 845
Antiphon, The Church's..... 712
Ants 773
Anxiety 256
Apostates 545
Appeal to God..... 335
Approbation 821
Arabs 104
Architect, Crafty..... 159
Arguing, Value of..... 351
Argument, Artless..... 474

PAGE

Argyll, Peace of 760
Armada, Spanish..... 703
Arms broken..... 622
Arrows 554
God's, are sharp..... 531
Poisoned 291
Art and tobacco..... 81
Mission of 79
Ask and receive..... 255
Ass in the East..... 364
Wild 428
Associates 112
Atheists, A question for..... 546
Atonement 20, 399
Avarice 840
Baca, Valley of..... 612
Backbiter 847
Backbiting 903
Backsliding 828
Banners, Bearer of..... 484
Battle-cries 17
Battlefield 38
Battle, Scene of the..... 39
Barren, Fruitful land turned to..... 662
Beacons 654
Bear robbed of whelps..... 851
Beasts, Creation of..... 429
Friendship of..... 289
Beautiful, Use and abuse of..... 240
Beauty 939
True 241, 273
Beds 237
Eastern 708, 781
Bees 608
Attacked by 678
Beggar, Lunatic..... 541
Begging 516
Beginnings, Danger of 53
Small 653
Beginning well..... 768
Beholder, A forgotten..... 316
Believers, Joy of..... 528
Benediction 710
Perpetual 922
Beneficence 761, 884
Benefits 573
Benevolence, Reward of.....813, 820
Benezet 574
Best, All for the..... 127

PAGE

Bible....45, 470, 482, 522, 623, 684, 689, 692, 695, 697, 753, 779, 822
Bible a guide....779 a treasure 214
Charms of.... 693
Destruction of.... 141
Effect of printed.... 139
God in the.... 93
in churches.... 139 in Iceland 211
Love for 689
My mother's.... 747 Permanence of 695 poetry 474 reading 681, 719
saviour of church.... 140
Stories of.... 695
Study of.... 139
Supremacy of.... 693
Testimonies to....689, 887
Birthplaces 616
Blessed 681
Blessing 668
Asking a.... 111
God 131
Blessings in disguise.... 524
Present 756
Blind 381
Boar, Wild.... 605
Boats, The two 352
Body, Wonders of.... 311
Bonds, Fatal.... 877
Bones at grave's mouth.... 721
Books, Value of.... 164
Bosom and right hand.... 589
Bottles, Worshipping.... 391
Bow at a venture.... 108
Brave boy 30
Bravery 196 and cowardice.... 596
Attraction of.... 32 in death.... 32
Mark of 32
Bribery 101, 494
Bright moments.... 258
Brimstone 342
Brooks in the desert.... 294
Brotherhood, Need of.... 50
Bubble, Man a.... 624
Buchanan, George.... 168
Builders 204
Building, Christian.... 195
Built up.... 360
Bulls of Bashan.... 487
Burden-bearer 596
Burdens 517, 552
Business, Kindness in.... 54
Caffre converted.... 521
Calamities, Chain of.... 271
Calamity 277
Calf, Molten.... 657
Calumny 664
Camel 307

PAGE

Captains 63
Captive set free....432, 632
Caractacus 97
Care, God's.... 722
Cast forth.... 480
Censoriousness 394
Ceremony, Oriental.... 47
Chaff 455
Change 897
A great.... 825
Character.....388, 389, 392, 791, 881, 897
Building up.....290, 388
by association.... 805 inherited 803
Charitable disposition 922
Charity rewarded.... 864
Charlatan 320
Chastening 757
Chatham, Earl of.... 815
Cheerfulness 733, 852
Cheer, True.... 622
Child 11
Confidence of 562
Children, Bringing up.... 885
Government of 886
Love of.... 708
Playing with 706
Teaching 595
Choice 748
Chord, The needed.... 387
Christ, Conquests of 667
Empire of.... 667
Friendship of 560
Christian's portion 473
Christ, Knowledge of.... 886
Personal appearance of.... 530
Praise to 583
Christ's Kingdom, Prayer for.... 636
Christ the power of God.... 457
Chronicles, Optimism of.... 64
Church, Divisions in.... 153
Duty of 162
Gifts to.... 156
Sacrifice for.... 158
True 166, 488
Unity of 153
World's antagonism to.... 160
Cities for defense.... 94
City, Evil in.... 548
exalted 805
Clay, The scented.... 823
Clay to the seal.... 422
Cleaveth 683
Clermont, The minister of.... 820
Clouds 419
Cloud, Vanished 298
Colored light 317
Columba 506
Combat, Ancient mode of.... 343
Comfort 287, 487, 594
Comforting, A wife's method of.... 275
Commerce, Influence of.... 76
Commissariat of creation.... 651

PAGE Companions 824
Evil 114, 493, 847
Compassion, True 287
Compensations 429
Complaint 274
Complaints, Unjust 274
Conceit 757
Blow to 251
Confederate peoples 610
Confession 174, 542
Confidence 170, 469, 627
in God 661, 669
Our 708
Conflict 559
Conquerors, Lesson to 51, 718
Conquest, Greed of 121
Conscience 371, 556, 797
Guilty 332
Conscientiousness 172, 230, 404
Consecration 68, 615
Consolation for a mother 331
Contempt 384
Contention 761, 855
Contentment 586, 793, 835, 913
Contrast, A 806
Contrasts 583
Conversation 878
Conversions, Early 785
Cords, Contraction of 177
Cornerstone 678
Coronation 115
Cosmical theories, Ancient 369
Cosmos 648
Counselors 806
Counsel, Wicked 239 with young men 93
Countries, Names of 559
Courage, Holy 166, 496
Men of 202
Value of 32
Court, Who is in the 250
Covenant 101, 218
Covetousness 875, 879
Cowardice 332, 596
Moral 917
Creation 788
Delight in 630
Magnitude of 787
New 543
Temple of 638
Creator 482
Crime 717
Crocodile 437, 438, 439, 440, 441
Crown and testimony 115
Incorruptible 51
Cruelties of heathen 590
Cruelty, Religious 468
Cunning 61
Curses 665, 907
Cursing, Clothed with 665
Cyrus, a gardener 829
Cyrus' favor to Jews 151
Cyrus, Two feasts of 412

PAGE Danger 434
Preservation in 311
Tempting 760
Dash in pieces 457
Daughters of Zelophahad 22
David 69, 481, 601
Confession of 53
Example of 56
Influence of on Hebrew song 154
Messengers of 49
Officers of 48
Davies, Griffith 818
Daysman 308
Deaf and dumb 518
Death 328, 329, 337, 338, 342, 344, 346, 499, 517, 592, 625, 832
Death a happy surprise 306
Alike in 609
Light in 313
of wicked 805
Place of 675
Premature 143
Premonitions of 301
Preparations for 499, 625
the great leveler 539
Unlamented 144
Debt 888
Deceit 598
Decision 177, 206, 207
Dedicated 48
Dedication 498
Defense, A sure 463
National 880
Degradation 782
Deist confounded 756
Delight in God 361
Deliverance 486, 576, 704
Dependence, Mutual 77
Desangiers 827
Desire unburdened 253
Despondency, Check to 410, 559
Destruction 589
Devil 269
Tactics of 269
Dew 382, 759, 863 of Hermon 709
Difficulty well met 210
Diligence 774, 809, 826, 917
Direct, Wisdom to 177
Discipline 344, 443, 891
Discretion 669
Dishonesty 771
Disinterestedness 116
Disobedience 217, 747, 933
Disputes 855
Dissipation 891
Divine right 609
teaching, Need of 495
Docility versus stubbornness 819
Dogs 488, 558
Doing good 516
Door, Keep the 721
Doors, Opening the 27

PAGE
Dove 548
Dream 398
Drinking 825, 827, 877, 893
Drink, Strong..... 867
Driver, Cruel..... 814
Drunkard rebuked..... 320
Duke's example, The..... 520
Dumb praising God..... 544
Durie's Psalm..... 702
Duties, Daily 44
Duty 128, 215, 224, 241, 648
Fidelity to..... 222 its own reward..... 242
Price of.....246
Eagle 432
Flight of 933
Prey of..... 432
Early piety..... 785
Earnestness, Example of.....103, 191
Earth as teacher..... 318
Creation of..... 421 given to men..... 673 is the Lord's..... 490
Earthquakes 477
Earth's produce..... 65
East to west..... 647
Edict against the Jews..... 244
Egotism 869
Egotistic talker..... 329
Eliot, John..... 804
Embracing 614
Encampment, Arab..... 507
Enemies 905
Kindness to.....392, 610
Energy 192, 374
Enlargement, Real..... 91
Enthusiasm 393, 431
Enticement 106
Envy 187, 285, 585, 831, 894, 912
Ministerial 656
Ephraim 596
Escape, Providential..... 99
Escapes, Narrow..... 585
Establish 626
Esther dramatized..... 239
Eternity 758
Event, Significant..... 158
Everlasting 623
From 787
Evil 777, 817, 829
company 748, 754, 778, 882 eye 890 for good..... 664 habits 778
overruled by God..... 194
Proneness to..... 341 tolerated 460
Way of..... 873
Exaltation and abasement..... 300
Example 755
Power of.....188, 199
Exile, Home after..... 156
Exiles 144

PAGE
Extolling the Lord..... 680
Eyes, Enlightening the 482
Fixing on the Lord..... 492
Ezra, Journey of..... 170
Prayer of..... 174
Fabricius 242
Faith 172, 174, 257, 305, 547, 552, 801 and sight..... 560
Faithfulness 229, 643, 939
Test of..... 107
Faith of parents..... 257 triumphant 669
False step, One..... 747
Fame 342
True 13
Families 18, 206
Father, Instruction of..... 763
Our 621, 647
Fear 39, 281, 333, 546, 828, 866
of God.....711, 746, 784, 831
Feasting, True..... 237 Feast of Ahasuerus..... 237 of Queen..... 238
Feasts, Oriental..... 242
Feast, The, of Purim..... 259
Feet and hands..... 513
Fenced way..... 344
Fenelon 823
Feuds 850
Few 653
Fidelity 903 honored 243
Power of a child's..... 468
Filial obedience..... 914
Fingers, Talking with 775
Finished 80, 81
Firmness, Christian..... 203
Fit to go out..... 22
Flattery 105, 470
and churlishness..... 551
Flies, Foolish..... 778
Flower, Fatal..... 116
Folly 907
Parable of..... 816
Fool 908
Foolish 922
Foreign troops..... 32
Foresight 773
Forests, City of..... 37
Forethought, Need of 35
Forgiveness 897
Forgive, Ready to..... 615
Forgotten 500
Formality 540
Francke's school 427
Franklin on the Bible..... 681
Fretfulness 861
Friends 345, 860, 904
Consideration for..... 292
Faithful 396
Friendship 509, 851, 860, 914, 915
Considerate 338
False 402

PAGE

Friendship Fickleness of 383 severed 549
tried 275, 294
Friends, Job's three 283 tested 383
Treacherous 549
Friend, Wronging a 913
Frost 423
Furrows 706
Future, Care for 65
Man made for 20
Gadites 34
Gain, Fraudulent 821
Greedy of 749
Gardens, Oriental 838
Garie, Rev. J 514
Gate, King's 26
Gebel 610
Genealogies 209
Generosity 809
Gentleman 381
Gently, Speaking 795
Get up and go on 513
Giants, Noted 51
Gift, A father's 595
Gifts, Willing 156
Giving 69, 167, 220, 221, 757, 916
Gladness 569
Glory all to God 912
A Mother's 241 of the New Jerusalem 237
The 82
Uncertain 593
Vanity of earthly 237
Gluttony, Evils of 237
God ... 319, 357, 359, 368, 369, 442, 468, 471, 510, 525, 546, 639, 652, 717 Access to 408 acknowledged 705 allseeing 834 allwise 784
and man 331, 343, 362
an unfathomable 671
a refuge 255, 480, 495, 533, 536 a sleeping 529 at work 320
Beneficence of 730
Benevolence of 363, 485
Blessing 443
Blessing and curse of 775
Blessing of 668
Care of .. 46, 425, 427, 507, 508, 571, 597
Confidence in 311, 345
Control of 404
Counting him out 729 defense 484
disposes 324, 865
Equity of 397 ever present 717
Existence of 315
Fatherhood of 358, 571
Fear of 205, 391
Footsteps of 567
Fulness of 473

PAGE

God Gifts of 217
Goodness of 369
Greatness of 84, 670
Help of 50, 67, 97, 508
hiding face 618
Holiness of 331, 368
House of 221
Humanity craves 259
Inquiry for 762
Impartial 308
Incomprehensibility of 314 in Israel 600
In the hand of 53 in the house 672 is good 712 is righteous 694
King of Kings 441
Knowledge of 374, 442, 633
Leading of 614
Looking at 506
Love of 297
Mercy of 216, 322, 663
Mysterious leading of 364, 441
Nearness of 696, 728
Nearness to 565
Neglecting 371 omnipotent 69
omniscient 40, 269
Pardoning love of 217
Patience of 85
Personality of 356
Personal relations with 67
Power of 403, 533, 733
Presence of 360, 473, 524, 534
Promise of fulfilled 461
Protection of 752
Purpose of 270
Purpose of concerning Solomon ... 46
Revelation of 420
Reward for serving 63
God's delight 817
God, Seeking 42
God's hand, In 874
interposition 856 knowledge 836
planting 522
God, Tenderness of 270
the supreme ruler 725
Trust in ... 47, 322, 334, 432, 458, 472, 478, 632, 633
Unchangeableness of 396
Unsearchableness of 443
Visions of 540
Voice of 397, 575
Watchfulness of 388
Where is their 672
Wisdom of 403, 441
Wisdom of a ground for faith ... 377 wishes to make men happy 85
Without 696
Word of 211, 213, 215, 363, 615
worketh slowly 602
Works of 418, 566, 567
Wrath of 288, 456, 598, 622

PAGE

Godly 472
son of ungodly father..... 132
Gold 373, 374, 808
Love of..... 692
of Ophir 66
Good deed..... 874 fortune, Men not dependent on.... 208
man 795
Goodness, is it profitable..... 408
Good thing, Too much of a..... 906
Gospel blessings..... 365
Spreading the 911
Stability of..... 569
Gossiping 801
Government, Good..... 926
Governor's table..... 200
Grace and glory..... 612
Grass 584, 649
Gratitude 169, 187, 561, 568, 581, 679
Grave a rest..... 279
Equality in..... 386
Great men 208
Greatness 11, 260 relative 194
Thy 716
True 240
Greenland missionaries..... 467
Grief, Selfish 279
Growth 300, 766
Guidance, Divine.....587, 653
Need of 723
Guiney-worm 284
Habit 909
Power of..... 924
Habits 323
Hail 654
Hale, Matthew..... 519
Hallel, Our..... 671
Hallelujah 733 victory 111
Haman 253
Hamath, Land of..... 270
Handicraft 190
Hand on mouth..... 380
Hands, The most beautiful..... 938
Hand to hand..... 808
Happiness 207, 389, 551, 898
Payson's 407
True 726, 831
Happy nation 726
Hardening face..... 880
Harmony in God's works..... 437
Harvest 794
Prayer for 566
Haste 142
Hasty thought..... 675
Head, Covering the..... 720
Health, Studying laws of..... 399
Hearken, Refusing to..... 607
Heart 893 broken 545 divided 119
Heaviness in..... 818

PAGE

Heart Keeping the 767, 771, 782
New 543
Heart-sickness 821
Hearts of men 34
Heart, Steadfast 555
Strength of..... 588
Hear, Who doth 558
Heathen, counsel brought to naught ... 505
Heathenish idea..... 408
Heathen, Story of a..... 480
Heaven 473
Heavenly bodies..... 426
treasure 101
Heavens, Surveying the.....419, 465, 481
Heaven, Way to..... 522
Heine 489
Hell 782
Help in God..... 703
Prayer for..... 697
Heredity 15, 112, 161, 383
Heritage, Our..... 691
Hero 31, 247
A young..... 247
Hezekiah 127, 131
Hidden made manifest..... 833
Hiding-place, A good..... 626
Hidings of God's face 495
Him..... 503
Hindrances 168
Hippopotamus 436, 437, 440
History 17
Hoar-frost 425
Holy Spirit..... 600
Home, A godless..... 765
A perfect..... 937
Importance of..... 289
of the soul..... 527
Home-troubler 810
Honesty 803, 870, 888
in high life..... 54
Honey 482, 608, 896
Honored in death..... 70
Honor in the dust..... 463 to self 813
Hope 340, 526, 570, 804
False 800
in death..... 832
Hopelessness 198
Hope of upright..... 316
Reason for..... 175 regained 292
Horn, Lifting up the..... 591
Horse 430, 431
Hospitality 390
Houghed 48
House breaking in India..... 366
House, Build thee a..... 46
By the sides of 705
Household Queen, The..... 812
Houseroofs 875
Housetops in Cairo..... 572
Howard, John..... 390
Humanity 882

PAGE
Humble origin 207
Hume and his mother..... 793
Humiliation 113
Humility ...41, 169, 369, 433, 434, 817, 856, 857, 870, 881, 882, 928, 930
Hundred talents, What for the..... 120
Hungry, Food to the..... 357
Hunting, Oriental..... 488
Hurling, Death by..... 120
Hymn, Origin of a..... 227
Hymns, Anonymous 632
Hymn. The first..... 624
The supreme..... 512
Hypocrisy 598, 804, 911
Iconoclasm 116
Idleness 774, 869
Idle people..... 799
Idolatry in India, Patronizing..... 658
Idol, Best use of..... 101
Idols 673
Weakness of..... 637
Idol, Tidings sent to 28
Immortality, Longings for..... 313
Importunity 362
Imprecations 664
Imprecatory psalms..... 664
Inactivity, Evils of..... 104
In and out..... 298
Indian and Quakers..... 514
Individualism 593
Individual, Power of 166
Industry....76, 374, 793, 794, 820, 888, .. 889, 909, 937
Infanticide 590
Infidel, Conversion of.....839, 841
Infidelity 866
Influence 199, 382
Influence of the great..... 33
Influence, Unconscious..... 903
Ingratitude 597, 713
to God..... 248
Inheritance 65 of Saints 561
Inhumanity 862
Injustice 891
Innocence, Confidence of 316
Inquiry, Spirit of 90
Insects, Destructive 85
Insolvent, The honest 516
Inspiration 394
Instruction, Hated 770
Instruments, Imperfect 298
Integrity, ...463, 493, 812
Intercession 246
Interview 698
Israel 713
Design of 655
The true 64
Jabez 15
Japanese convert 694
Jealousy 475, 778
Jehoahaz 143
Jehoram, Sin of 112
PAGE
Jehovah, Reign of 637
Jerusalem 701, 730
View of 701
Jew 145
Jewel, Sympathetic 344
Jews' language 231
Wailing place 602
Joash, Apostasy of 119
Job 282
Book of 267, 299
Daughters of 444
Grounds of judgment of 282
Joke, Practical 910
Jordan driven back 671
Joy 36, 37
Christian 213, 528, 617
in death 832
Influence of 732
Reverent 129
Suddenness of 258
Universal 131
Judah, Sin of 144
Judge, A Courageous 870
Judge, A godly 169
Judgment 466
and prudence 881
Just, Condemning the 853
Justice 403, 405, 608, 641, 876, 923 foundation of life..... 403
Impartial 404, 405
Sword of 402 to others 295
Just, Memory of 114
Path of the 766
Kindness, Motive for 245
Power of 49, 795, 919, 938
to God's people 252
Kingdom, Everlasting 727 shaken by a miner's son 677
The coming 80
King, Every man a 77 of Glory 491
King's daughter 532 of Judah and Israel 145
Tombs of 113
King, The 920
True 582
Kishon 610
Knees preventing 279
Knoweth, He 562
Knowledge 894
Advantage of 376
and wisdom 785
Benefits of 786
God preserves..... 884
Imperfection of 786
Power of 814, 894
Pursuit of 318
without love 270
Wonderful 716
Knox, ...505

PAGE
Labor 830, 863
Dignity of 254
Incessancy of 91
Sacredness of 225
Lachish 121
Lamp, Our 690
Lamps 341
Law 60
Laughter, Scornful 510
Law of God 482, 767
Composition of 931
Laws, Unchanging 255
Leader, Elements of a good 152
Leading, God's 724
Lead us 719
Learning, Holy Spirit a guide to 377
Learning, Revival of 900
Legacy with a moral 861
Legion, The thundering 477
Lending to the Lord 864
Liars 849
Lie 910
Life 249, 257, 298, 300, 355, 619 after grave 325
a trust 900
Brevity of 158, 625
compared to book 70
Decline of 520 eternal 539
Evanescence of 337
Evening of 445
Long, ...629, 755, 800
Love of 273
Mistaken criticism of 350
Perils of 10
Ready for 258
Riddle of 9
Life's day 296
Life, Stream of 10
Traces of 348
True end of 273
Value of 445
Way of 797
Well-ordered 124
Lift up 491
Light 367, 368, 415, 422, 423, 471
Fisherman and the 777
Follow the 690
Inner 803
Jesus the 361
Lightning and light 426
Light of God 415, 479, 620 on mountain tops 246
Rebelling against 366 shadowing 414
Lingering 794
Lion, Like a 475
Lips polluted 541
Lives, Purpose of 297
Living, Duty of holy 173
Livingstone 248
Locusts 599, 654
Longsuffering abused 869

PAGE
Look up 460
Lord appeared 88 my portion 722
their banker 864
Lots, Casting 62, 244, 858
Love 686
of God 130
Taking away in 315
True 509
Lowell, Rev. Samuel 845
Lowly exalted 254
Lying 267, 402, 798, 816 in wait 468
Magistrates, Just 109
Mammon 380
Man 421 and nature 16
a missionary 23
Assumption of 434
a temple in ruins 724
Early history of 25
Enthusiasm of 24
Greatness and littleness of 12
Manhood, Opening 27
Man, Manufacture of 24
Mission of 29
Nature of 21, 465
Need of 428
Restoration of 209
Seraph within 26
Strength of 399
True freedom of 27
Mariner, Aged 593
Marksman 99
Marriage 601
Martyr 406 saved 634
song 529
Massillon 762
Masters and servants 389
Maternal influence 763
Maturity, Coming to 290
Mazarin, Death of Cardinal 342
Meditation 519, 537, 563, 682, 722
Meekness 808
Memories, Early 754
Memory 594
Men, evil and good 12
Very able 26
Merchant, An American 538
Mercies 581, 634
Mercy 380, 503, 542, 600, 608, 646, 655, 665, 677, 727, 873
Mercy of God 663
Tender 646
Messengers, Faithful 823
Messiah, Dominion of 415
Messianic Pæan 640
Michal's contempt 41
Midnight, Trouble at 405
Mighty men 30
Military talent 12
Milk, Pouring out 310

PAGE
Milton's Ode on the Nativity 614
Mind, Sinful 883
Mining 373
Minister, A pacific 259
Faithful 106
True 155
Ministry 411
a trust 171
Students for 337
Miracles, Reasonableness of 319
Mischief 486, 515
Miser 562
Misery in apparent prosperity 285
Mission 169
Missionaries and music..... 208
Mistake, A common 636
Mitigation, Merciful 108
Modesty 781, 845, 902
Moffat and the lion 935
Money 117
Money-getting 749
Moon, New 606
Morality, Trade 757
Mordecai 243
Morning 460
and evening 285
Mortality, Bills of 325
Moscow, Napoleon at 423
Moth 284
Mother 509
Christian 776
Mothers 932, 935
Mother's influence 114
Mountains 616
Mourning 601
Murderer, ... 920
Murder prevented 899
Murmuring 292, 637, 675
Music 40, 41, 128, 504, 537, 731, 732
Old-time 19
Mysteries 422, 424, 638
Name, A good 881
of the Lord 528
Name's sake 665
Names, Irony of 14
Preservation of 190
Register of 152
Signification of 9, 152, 189
Natural and moral 85
Nature 85, 424, 429, 478, 578, 591 aiding science 651
Beauty of 662
God in ..303, 414, 415, 416, 418, 439, 442, 498
Divineness of human 11
Nature, Progress of 370, 438
Nature's praise 641
Nearer to God 691
Nearness, Danger in 769
Necho, Invasion of 142
Needy, Judging the 582
Negative Work 901
Nehemiah 229, 231
Neighbors, Duty to 844

PAGE
Neptune's cup 635
Nethinim 209
Newton, Sir Isaac..... 831
Niggardliness 797
Night 650
Nimrod 9
Non nobis Domine 672
Norwegian farmer 862
Nostrils, Breath of 283
Nothing, Save 82
Number 61
Obedience 213, 217, 363, 406
Ocean, ...421, 649
Oil, Cellars of 64
Old age 580, 581
Beauty of 65
Happiness of 55, 330
Olive tree 546
One thing 494
Open wide 607
Opportunity 335
God's 256
Opposers of God's people 97
Oracle, An 694
Order, Contrast of 60
Importance of 59
in Divine government 58 universal 58
Ostrich 429, 430
Oubliettes 847
Outward, From within 124
Oxen 36
Pain, Value of 873
Palm and cedar 630
Panic 536
Parallel, Historical 238
Pardon 463
not justice 707
Parental anxiety 267 correction 824
Parents 853
Advice to 883
Parepa at a funeral 293
Passions 771
Past 378, 379
Pasturage, Right of 16
Pastures 515
Paths, Two 839
Patience 410, 857
Divine 600
Patrick Henry 697
Patriot 260
Patriotism 196
Paulinus 327
Peace 406, 700, 752, 758
Peacemaker 935
Peace with God 698
Pelican 644
Perception, Lack of 441
Perfecting 716
Perplexities of good men 37
Persecutors 467, 522
Perseverance 201, 529

PAGE

Persistency 201
Personal effort 190
Petitioner, A bold 248
Petra 663
Philosophers, Three 926
Phœnix 381
Physician and drayman 904
Piety at home 88
Pillows, The three 523
Pity (human) 125, 345
Plans 718
  Weighing 842
Planted by God 631
Plan, Value of 898
Pleasure, Pursuit of 412
Pleasures ending in death 781
Pleiades 425
Politics, Religion of 923
Poor 807, 829, 861, 887
  and needy 522
  Helping the 380, 381, 387, 390 man's wisdom, A 758
  Not afraid to be 106 not despised 665
  Oppressing the 349
  Riches of the 515
Pope and ambassador 395
Porters, ... 61
Portion, A permanent 537
Portions, Sending 212
Possession, The great 473
Possessions, Consecrated 358
Post 307
Posterity, Verdict of 123
Potters 626
Poverty 350, 365
  Compensations of 919
  Cry of 876
  Spiritual 444
Power, Human 105
  Passion for 198
  Reception of 414
Praise 42, 44, 59, 465, 569, 648, 670, 673, 675, 709, 710, 728.
  Anthem of 43
  Benefits of..... 43
  Disinterestedness of 43
  Instruments and 59 of bad man 204 Psalm of 641
  to God 82, 591, 663, 733
  Universality of 42
Pray and labor 195
Prayer 185, 249, 353, 361, 506, 511, 523, 550, 553, 575, 579, 585, 664, 666, 835, 841.
  Affinity with God in..... 109
  Answers to 83, 323, 541, 547, 564, 575
  Efficacy of..... 164
  Ejaculatory 203
  for help 479, 580
  for wrong things 656
  God hears 565
  Humility in 466

PAGE

Prayer Jehoshaphat's 109, 110
  Man of 462
  Necessity of 96 of David 557 of Levites 214 of Nehemiah 186, 232 of St. Patrick 582 of Solomon 84
  Power of 186, 527
Prayers, Children's 464
Prayer, Secret 187
Preachers, Rule for 351
Preaching 351, 393, 783
Prescience, Human 204
Presents, Royal 251
Pride .190, 249, 435, 511, 586, 802, 845, 921
Princes 16
  Slaughter of 112
  Trust in 728
Principle, Fidelity to 936
Prisoner 603
Privileges, Misimproved 750
Prodigality 866
Profligacy 878
Progress of man 21
Promise on 47
Promises 692
Promises, Faith in 513
Prompt action, Need of 307
Property, Consecration of 56
Prophecy, Voice of 105
Prosperity 163, 216
  Danger of 89
  Hollow 300
Prostrations, Eastern 583
Protection of God 701
Proud, Overthrow of 319
Proverbs 745, 746
Providence 185, 216, 246, 247, 321, 339, 443, 458, 510, 511, 586, 597, 659, 662, 713, 727, 843.
  House, God's 628
Prudence 89, 163, 881, 914
Psalm, A patriotic 714
Psalmist, Hope of 475
Psalms 640, 652
  Book of 459, 484, 505
  Penitential 502
  The prince's 643
Psalm the second 456
  the sixth 462
  the twenty-second 486
  the twenty-third 490
  the twenty-seventh 494
  the twenty-ninth 497
  the thirty-first 499
  the thirty-second 502
  the thirty-seventh 513
  the forty-first 525
  the forty-fifth 532
  the fiftieth 540
  the fifty-first 543
  the sixty-eighth 570
  the seventy-second 584

PAGE
Psalm the seventy-third 587
the seventy-fourth 588
the seventy-sixth 592
the seventy-eighth 595
the eighty-first 606
the eighty-fifth 613
the eighty-seventh 617
the eighty-eighth 617 the ninety-fifth 634
the hundred and third 645
the hundred and eighteenth 677 the hundred and nineteenth 680, 683, 690, 692.
the hundred and twenty-seventh. 705 the hundred and thirty-first 708 the hundred and thirty-second . 708 the hundred and thirty-seventh.. 715
Public opinion, Condemned by..... 299
Pulpit, Earliest 210
Purim, Feast of 259
Purposes, Mistaken 340
Steadiness in 340
Queen, Influence of 792
Intercession of 254
Questioners 90
Raiment, Treasures of 372
Rain 417, 418, 918
and grace 425, 572
Read thyself 913
Ready 256
Realism 769
Reason 209
Rebellious, Gifts for 573
Redeemer 346
Mighty 890, 891
The great 668
Redemption, Source of 400
Red Sea 595
Reflection 378
Reformation 131, 176
Reformers 229
Rehoboam and Jeroboam 92
at Jerusalem 94
Rejoice 503
Release 386 and gifts 242
Religion 751, 891
Influence of 142
our advantage 357
Preparation for 141
Real 45
Spirit of 108 stronger than science 141
Treasure in 117
True 684
Religious culture 21 rejoicing 165 procession 574
Remembrance 669
Reminiscence 489
Rending garments 173
Repayment 824
PAGE
Repentance 185, 400, 401
and self-righteousness 402 Death-bed 401 delayed 400, 802
Real 130
Repetitions 712
Repose, Religious 707
Reproof 790, 792, 811, 839, 884, 895, 921
Repulse, No danger of 130
Request, A small 248
Resentment, Above 936
Reservoirs 366
Resistance 302
Resignation 304, 305, 535
Resoluteness 371
Resolution, Clinching a good 199
Respect of persons 321
Responsibility 140
Rest 210
in God 674
Need of 170
on every side 98
Results 152
Resurrection 280, 326
Retribution 89, 113, 253, 373, 464, 509
Reuben's fall 18
Revenge 243, 872
Reverence 40, 434
Reverses 842
Revival 613
Reward 222, 482 of deeds 908 Riches 803, 829, 837
and discontent 349
and wisdom 427
of God 676
unsatisfying 810
Rich fool 830
for a moment 797 Haste to be 921
man and his son 519
Ridicule 189
Righteous, Eye of God on 411
Righteousness, imputed 311
Little with 843
National 833
Righteous—Peace 583 save country 359
Right hand, Man of 605
Rivers, Oriental 294
Robespierre 557
Rock 496, 560
Nests in 360
To rest on 322
Rolls, House of the 163
Root 347
Royalty, Corrupt 926
Rule, Rev. Gilbert 500
Ryland and his hymns 409
Sabbath 215, 219, 220, 230
Joy in 680
Sabbath-keeping 923
Sabbath school 882
Sacrifices 87, 544

PAGE

Safeguards 632
Safety 458, 626
in peril 703
Sailor, Story of 175
St. Anthony and the cobbler 334
Salt, Covenant of 97
Salvation 573
Sand-storms 385
Sapphires, Place of 373
Satan 268
Satan's disguises 159
Satisfaction 904
Satisfied 512
Saul, Character of 28
Saviour, ... 524
Savonarola, Prayer of 604, 695
Scales, True 895
Scientist's testimony 927
Scoffer 783, 925
Scorn 402, 487
Bearing, ... 384, 385
Scorning 826, 836
Scribes, ... 13, 62
Scriptures, Power of 927
Sea, The 661
Waters of the 504
Sealed transgressions 328
Sealing documents in the East 245, 328
Seals, Oriental 218
Secret of the Lord 492, 761
Security 627, 822
Carnal 468
Seducing others to sin 94
Seek Thy servant 699
Selah 458
Self-control 848, 863, 907
Self-denial 68
Self-destroyer 788
Self-mastery 388
Self-reliance 296
Self-respect 902
Self-righteousness 402
Self, Victory over 771, 841
Self-will 923
Sense, Organs of 633
Separated 854
Sepulchres 193
Sermon 791, 819
Serpent-charming 555
Servants, Eastern 12
of God 675
Service, Christian 154, 222, 612
Fruits of faithful 107 road to honor 58
Services due to God 675
Long religious 211
Service, Variety in 154 versus self-seeking 209
Shadow, Measuring time by 296
Sheba, Queen of, words to Solomon .. 91
Sheep 600
Shepherd of Israel 603
Shepherds and husbandmen 122
Shepherd's staff and crook 489

PAGE

Sherman, Roger 791
Shield 724
The Lord a 458
Shiloh and Zion 601
Ships, Swift 307
Shishak, inscription in Karnak 95
Shock of corn 290
Shushan 239, 245
Sick, Kindness to 509
Siege raise 485
Signet rings 254
Sihon and Og 711
Silence 634
of God 542
Prudent 188, 305
Sin 492, 634, 643, 749, 854
a boomerang 126 and punishment 356, 578
Atonement for 129
Battle with 178
Sincerity 370
Sin, Confession of 176
Consequences of 348
Deceitfulness of 332
detested 314, 485
Evil of 125
Singing 619
a service to God 226, 619 in eternity 223 with the understanding 19
Sin, Hatred for 639
Influence of on posterity 217
Insidious influence of 54
Sinner, Dying 578
Sin, No man suffers alone for 126 of Eliashib 228
Peril of tampering with 324
Power of 143
Relapsing into 684
Results of 751, 768
Risks of 750
Running from 765
Sins, Enticing 748
Sin, Slavery of 140, 145
Sins, Little 268
Sin, Snares of 127
Sins of our Fathers 655
Sin, the first 332
Two views of 775
Sirdar, English 929
Skeleton, The crowned 539
Skin for skin 273
Skin-Magic 654
Slander 202, 408, 472, 509, 554, 699, 905
Unscrupulous 160
Sleep, Providence in withholding .. 250, 252
Sloth 879, 885, 899, 909
Smoke, ... 571, 604, 643
Snow 730
in Switzerland 417
Society, Advantages of 915
Society's problem 384
Solomon 90, 92
Heritage of 75

PAGE
Solomon's servants 90
Solitude 827
Song 19
Songs 409, 685 born out of trial 226 of ascents 702
Quieting 208
Sorrow 228, 601, 836
Sorrowful meat 292
Sorrow, Moderation in 293
Sorrows, Hidden 278
Sorrow, Unselfish 186
Soul 327, 489, 554
Souls equal before God 925
Soul-winning 810, 811
Sound-hearted 687
Sower, The violet 807
Sowing and reaping 704
Sparrow 644
Speaking evil 798
for good 395 hastily 658
Spectre of Brocken 711
Speech 853
and silence 396
Power of 395
Spices for burial 102
Spirit, Holy 544
Spirits, Familiar 29
Spiritual foes 258
quickening 684
Spring 566
Springs 649
Stability of Divine kingdom 631
Standpoints, Two 279
Star, Child's impressions of 303
Stars, Lessons from 426
State, A 833
Steps, False 49
Stone builders rejected 679
Stork 650
Storm, Calmness in 534
Storms 633
Music from 286
Storm, The 416
Stranger and sojourner 520
Strangers, Prayer for 86
Streams in Palestine 293
Strength 429, 431, 436
Strengthened 502
Strength of animals 435
Striking hands 772
Students, Two hard 746
Success from God 38, 406
Successors, Preparation for 57
Succoth 560
Suffering, Hope from 336
Maddening force of 276
Use of 308, 323, 590
Summer, Drought of 503
Sunday-scholar 813
Sun-images 98
Sun of righteousness 419
Sunshine and storm 563

PAGE
Support, Divine 474
Sureties 806
Surgeon, Reply of 687
Surrender to God's will 422
Suspicion 34
Swearer 836
Swift, Dean and the lady 889
Swift's butler 928
Sympathy 345, 369, 396, 759
Power of 276, 335
Prayer for..... 697
Taking fast hold 764
Talebearing 472, 872
Talker 313
Talking, Dogmatical 330
Teachers 396
Teaching 372
priest 100
Teach me 683
Tear-bottles 553
Tears 604
Te Deum 726
Temple 66, 76, 78
Our share in 165
Second 159
Temporal and spiritual 356
Temptation 754, 763, 772, 780
Tempter 748
Tents, Dwelling in 17
Terry, Master 507
Test, A good 568
Thankfulness 675, 713
Thankfulness in trouble 271, 470
Thanksgiving 223, 493, 674
Songs of 227
Thirst 525
Thorn, Haman's 250
Thought, Men of..... 840
Responsibility of 483
Thoughts 840
Vain 691
Three years 94
Thunder in the poets..... 497
Terror caused by..... 498
Tidings, Good..... 256
Time, An inch of..... 538
Tomorrow 911
Tongue.....347, 564, 859, 878
Blessings of 798
Proverbs about 289
Sins of the..... 725
Wholesome 834
Tower, The Lord a high.....476, 724
Trade, Morality of..... 790
Tradition 331
Transgressors, Way of..... 822
Traps 719
Traveler, Improvident 766
Traveler's fare 930
Treachery 557
Treasures, Hidden 280, 483
Treasure-trove 752
Treasuries of God..... 501
Tree, Man a..... 342

PAGE

Tremble O earth 671
Trial, Patience under 272
Trials 385, 407, 621
polish 849
Trial, Trust in 410
Tribulation 687
Tribulation, Reason of 336
Tried 479
Trouble 577, 660 in every house 243
Trumpets 606
Trust ..322, 471, 487, 496, 506, 518, 627, ... 673, 700, 720, 729
Trust, Groundless 505
in God 846, 929, 931
Truth 367, 504, 892
Power of 693
rewarded 850
Tryst with God 695
Turenne 761
Tyrants, Moral 93
Unbelief 596
Underhandedness 795
Understanding 687, 838
Hidden from 338
Vigor of 846
Undone, Something 205
Unfaithfulness 905
Unfeeling conduct 343
Ungodly, Terror of 372
Unity 218
Strength in 188
Uphold me 544
Upright, Exaltation of the 539
Vain thing, A 456
Valiant man 31
Vanity 459
Reward of 243
Variety 61
Vashti, Beauty of 238
Vessels, Holy 57
Vesture, New 645
Victory 260
not defeat 161
Vineyard 577
Voice 607
Still, small 337
Volney 828
Voltaire 867
Wages 896
Waiting the Lord's time ..501, 562, 575, 599
Walking with God 715
Wall, A tottering 561
Dedication of 226
War 25
Engines of 122
Money wasted in 31
Warning 635, 782
War, Personification of 25
Prince Eugene on 33
Warriors 49
War, Spoils of 62
Washington and his friends 295
Washpot 663

PAGE

Wasting 856
Watchfulness 171, 882
Christian 161
Watching 707
Water 30
Living 534
Pure 389
Waterspouts 526
Waves 618
Way, A plain 838
Keeping in the 844
Not in the 455
Our own 407
Ways, God's 653, 842
The 681
The right 660 Wealth, Abuse of 886 Wealth, Advantages of 883 and misery 353
Boasting in 538
Effects of 799
God's view of 359
Loss of 890
Weights, Just 801, 844, 870
Wheel 611
Whirlwinds in the East 271, 417
Whitefield, Rev. G 469
White flag 598
Wholeheartedness 715
Wholly sanctified 646
Wicked, Brief triumph of 348, 349, 354
End of 353, 556, 630, 652
Freedom of 355
Hopelessness of 371
Peril of 301, 317
Punishment of 461, 466, 516
Self-punishment of 349, 359
Treasures of 352
Wickliffe and the friars 678
Widow, Robbing the 877
Wife 770, 825, 859, 937
Honor to a 94
Relation of a 38
Wilderness, Lodge in 548
Will 207
Willing and doing 56
Will of God, Conforming to the 723
Wind and blossom 334
God in the 661
The east 372
Wings, Burden of 297
Winters in Palestine 731
Wires and electricity 427
Wisdom 394, 427, 750, 764, 783, 784, 788
Angel of 377
God the source of 753
Happiness of 759
Humility of 330
Jealousy of 760
Knowledge and 375
Search for 374
Wisdom's feast 789
Wisdom, True 378, 768, 823, 876, 917, 934
Value of 375

PAGE
Wise and foolish 828
How to be 376
Influence of 848
Who are the 75, 376
Wishart, Rev. G. 528
Wishing and willing 83
Wish of a good man 33
Withstood, They 122
Witness, A material 219
Wives, Strange 178
Woman 791, 825, 938
Woman, A famous 22 in the East 238, 241
Opportunity of 191
Woman's voice 812
Wonder-worker 618
Wondrous things 682
Word in season 401, 780, 839, 858 of God, Influence of 696 of God, Study of 697
of God, Truth of 694
Word, Power of the 420
Quickening of the 685
Words 392, 408, 565
Bitter 564
Pleasant 846 suitable 410
Work and pray 193
Each his 60
Workers, The two 868
Work for heaven 192 for sinners 224
Working men 197
for unknown [illegible] 224

PAGE
Work, Moral 260
Works, Duration of 195
Work, Willingness to 192 with God 193
Worldliness, Influence of 162
Worship 87, 118, 531, 634
Advantage of 118, 640
Difficulties of 157
due to God 39
Early at 563
Family 848
Grandeur of 88
Habit of public 83
Influence of 86
Late-comers to 82
Public 36, 153
True 642
Wrath, A king's 844 overruled 592
Slow to 831
Wrestlers 333
Years, Loss of 769
Yonder, Over 476
Young man 393
Youth 491, 579
Zeal 63, 130, 202, 576
Righteous 658
Unrighteous 321
Zechariah, Stoning of 118
Zendavesta, Extract from 648
Zerubbabel 14
Zion, Mt. 535, 536
Pleasure in 644